Dan's Papers

The most treasured gift of the holiday season is the one we give ourselves. For during the precious few weeks between Thanksgiving and New Year's we oh-so-mercifully slow the pace. Sure there are hectic hours preparing and shopping, but we all know there will be special moments when, surrounded by the people who mean the most to us, we'll steal an instant to quietly reflect on our good fortune.

So as 2004 draws to a close it is the people who mean the most to Zizzi Contracting who are to be thanked. For without our families, our valued clients, my trusted staff, our numerous suppliers, and the community that supports us, there would be no blessings to count. Thank you all. May your holidays be filled with as many treasured gifts as time will allow — James V. Zizzi

A Confession

Murderer Admits Trying To Frame Defendant At Pelosi Trial

By Dan Rattiner

The nine men and women seemed nervous, sitting in the old English drawing room. They did not speak. Some of them looked at their shoes. Others listened to the loud tick tick of the old grandfather clock in the corner or tried to read the titles of the dusty old books that lined the shelves around the room. After a time, the clock bonged six times, and, as the sound faded, just at that moment, the heavy door to the drawing room squeaked open and two men entered.

One, a man with a long cape, polished black shoes and a curved pipe in his mouth, turned to the other.

"Are they all here, Inspector?" he asked.

The second man, a small man with a pencil thin moustache, nodded solemnly. And so the first spoke to the group.

"My name is Sherlock Holmes," he said. "As we meet, an American named Daniel Pelosi stands trial, accused of murdering New York millionaire Ted Ammon at his East Hampton mansion one night three years ago.

"Now, I have assembled you all because every one of you has testified for the prosecution and against Mr. Pelosi in this trial. I do believe that all of you think he is the killer. Except one. And that one knows that Mr. Pelosi is innocent. Because that individual, whose name I will reveal at the end of this meeting, is the real killer."

A collective gasp filled the drawing room.

Mr. Holmes turned to the man sitting in a club chair on his right, a petty criminal named Clayton Moultrie. "Now you sir, were in the same jail with Mr. Pelosi, and have testified that Mr. Pelosi confessed to you that he committed the crime. Is that not right?"

"Yes, but...."

"And you went to the police and told him about that, and how Mr. Pelosi told you that he would pay you $100 for any tooth you could bring to him from the mouth of one of the other people in this room who would testify against him. Is that not the case?"

"Yes."

"So you agreed to wear a wire. And indeed Mr. Pelosi repeated his claim of having committed this crime. It's on the tape."

"Yes, it is."

"Now, isn't it true that, that as a result of all of this, even before you met Mr. Pelosi, on the night of the murder, you were burglarizing the home of Mr. Ammon, and he saw you, and since testimony against you would result in the rest of your life in the slammer, you killed him that night."

"That's not true. I did not kill Mr. Ammon."

"So you have framed Daniel Pelosi."

"It's a lie!"

"I see. Now, sitting next to you, I see Tracy Riebenfeld. Hello, Miss Riebenfeld."

"Hello."

"Now you are Mr. Pelosi's ex-girl friend, are you not?"

Mr. Pelosi dumped you, didn't he? And so did, as a matter of fact, Mr. Ammon. So you killed him.

Ammon

"Yes, I am."

"And there is a videotape of you passing money to Mr. Moultrie in the Riverhead McDonalds, is there not?"

"Yes. But I was only doing that to help nail that bastard Mr. Pelosi."

"Whom you were once in love with."

"Not any more."

"So that's understandable. Mr. Pelosi dumped you, didn't he? And so did, as a matter of fact, Mr. Ammon. So you killed him."

"Not true, not true," she said, burying her face in her hands and sobbing uncontrollably.

"Now, I see in that comfortable club chair there John Kundle, the owner of Safeguard Alarm Company. Pelosi hired you to put eight tiny cameras, invisible to the naked eye, around the house of Ted Ammon, did he not?"

"Yes, he did."

"And you did not think that was fair, did you? Particularly since you had an emotional attachment to him."

"That is completely false."

"But you hated Ted Ammon even more. Because he had owed you seventeen thousand dollars for a security system you had put in three years earlier. And you knew where the Ammon safe was, didn't you? So you killed Mr. Ammon and you decided to pin it on Mr. Pelosi."

"Not true, not true."

"Where is the money you stole from the Ammon safe that night?"

"I didn't steal any money."

"Now, Mr. Robert Pelosi, you are the father of Daniel Pelosi and you testified that your son asked you how he could dispose of something that he wanted never found, isn't that right?"

"That is correct."

"But in general you think your son is a complete waste of time. You won't even speak to him."

"That's true."

"And you thought he was such a disgrace to the Pelosi name that you decided to frame him, didn't you? He was having an affair with Generosa Ammon. So you killed Ted Ammon. And you pinned it on him in the belief that this would send him up the river for the rest of his life."

"That's absolutely not true," Robert Pelosi said, rising from his chair.

"Sit down. Now next to you we have Donald Doller. Mr. Doller, you are a forensic scientist, are you not?"

"Yes, sir."

"And you have testified that there was no body hair found at the scene that did not belong to either Mr. Pelosi or Mr. Ammon, isn't that true?"

"Yes, it is."

"But isn't it also true that you too were in love with Generosa Ammon?"

"Absolutely false."

"And in the forensic report, you left out one thing. Your OWN body hair. That Mr. Ammon pulled out of your head when you were murdering him."

"That's ridiculous. As you see, I am totally bald."

"So you are. Now, I am addressing now this woman sitting next to you, fiddling with her cuff links, and you are, are you not, Lori Finkel, another girlfriend of Mr. Ammon's. And you live in Water Mill."

"Yes, I do. And indeed the last person to see him alive before the murder, apparently."

"Yes, for coitus non-interruptus, wasn't it?"

Lori Finkel looked at the floor. "Yes," she said.

"I'm told that in your college days, you were an excellent lacrosse player."

"Yes, I was. I was all-state."

"And lacrosse sticks are very heavy weapons are they not?"

"Exactly what are you driving at, Mr. Holmes?"

"You know perfectly well what I am driving at."

"I did not kill Ted Ammon. Why would I kill Ted Ammon?"

"You tell me, Ms. Finkel."

"But I didn't kill him."

"Now, I'd like to turn my attention to the man sitting next to you, Ms. Finkel, who is Ed Meyer, the divorce lawyer employed by

We Need Laws To Stop Homeowners From Tearing Down Our History

By Dan Rattiner

A beautiful old historic home in Bridgehampton got torn down last week, just like that — fully standing in the morning and all down on the ground by that evening. It was the Captain Jeremiah Ludlow House at 352 Ocean Road. It went down on October 27, generating all sorts of calls to the police, the fire department and the historic society by people in the neighborhood, and what will replace it will be something entirely different, designed by an architect hired by its new owners, Andrew Grossman and Robin Howe. The town is shocked.

This house that is no more was three stories tall, with a circular turret on the third floor and a wrap around porch, outfitted in gingerbread trim on the first. It was built around one hundred and fifty years ago by a whaling boat captain, Captain Jeremiah Ludlow, who lived from 1816 to 1895 and who, at one time, owned a fleet of five whaling ships that operated out of the whaling port of Sag Harbor.

Absolutely no laws were broken in order for this to happen. The owners simply went to Town Hall and got a permit. No inspection required. No looking into the matter by the town. People are welcome to tear down their homes any time they want. And that is what this article is about. For an old New England community that prides itself on its heritage, which has magnificent private homes going back to the Revolution and before, it is really disgraceful that this valuable history is not protected against all this in some way.

One can argue that a man's home is his castle and he can do what he wants. One can say, you buy it you own it and it is nobody's business what you do with it. After all, if a house is, for example, abandoned for many years with the floors falling in and the roof open to the sky — which this one surely wasn't according to the testimony of those who have been inside this old home — is anybody but the owner going to pay to have it rebuilt, often at vast expense? And if there are new laws to be passed that protect one private home or another, who is going to decide which houses make the list? And who is going to pay the difference in the appraised value of an old home, if, before a certain date, it can be torn down if it is too expensive to maintain and, after that date, the homeowner is in hock for a. million dollars to keep it in shape?

TV personality Dick Cavett and former actress Carrie Nye had their historic, oceanfront, Stanford White mansion burn to the ground at Montauk six years ago, and even without plans, from photographs of what had been there, they spent well over $1 million to restore it exactly as it was. Few people have that kind of money to spend for the public good.

But something needs to be done. And there are plenty of examples from other historic communities that have done things. In Nantucket, you are not allowed to change anything about your house, anywhere on the island, without approval of an architectural review board, which has been charged to see that the character of the community is maintained. In Charleston, South Carolina, another historic community, they not only have laws like they do in Nantucket, but they have this past month passed a very creative new law that gives a tax credit to anyone who pledges that their house will not be sold to anyone who does not plan to live there at least six months a year.

This, on the surface, seems amazing. But Charleston real estate prices have gone through the roof just as they have here (and in Nantucket), but what has happened is that in Charleston, which is a vibrant, living, city — so many homes have been bought by people from afar who only come visit for one weekend a year or so is that the life is going out of the city.

"Used to be," the Mayor said, "that you could walk down the street and hear a ten-year-old taking a piano lesson inside one of these big mansions. No more."

Well, the tax credit is a payback for the loss of the value of the house, and many people are signing up. They will not have Charleston become a dead set piece of a time gone by.

Well, certainly it is a good argument to be made against winding up with the Hamptons as a "dead" community, just a museum of a time gone by.

Certainly, besides the above arguments, another argument can be made that if some super-rich prominent person or a super-genius architect in the future wants to come into town and tear down a tottering old mansion and on that site build a mansion with his own special stamp on it, one can say that he should be able to do that. Years from now, people will look at this former architect or billionaire's house and say, well, that house is now part of the town's history, too.

A good compromise, it seems to me, would be to say that if a person wants to buy an old historic house, they are going into the purchase with their eyes wide open, and if the place is beyond repair, they should be required, if they have to tear it down, to build another one much like what was there before. Doesn't have to be exact. Let at architectural review board decide.

There has been talk of having a survey done to consider just which houses in our community have historic value and which ones, even old ones, do not. It can be done. Those that are an absolutely precious heritage to the community should be landmarked and saved as is. Those just done in a fine historic style could be torn down but rebuilt in that style. And those that have no historic value could be torn down without a thought and a new house put up however the owner likes. A buyer would know about this three-tiered law going in. And if a historic commission were to rule on homes of over 100 years in age and assign them one of these three definitions, there could be tax credits offered, the largest to the first category, a smaller sum to the second category, none to the third category.

If this plan, or one like it, were put into effect, it would be a great blessing to this community and keep it as lovely as it is. We have

In The News

Macedonia, Heathrow, Little Egg Harbor, Santa And The Postal Service

By Dan Rattiner

Here are some of the odder items in the news this past week.

When the country known as Yugoslavia broke up fifteen years ago, many of what had been the provinces became countries themselves. These included Serbia, Croatia, Bosnia and Slovenia. Other provinces remained as part of Serbia, and these include Kosovo and Macedonia. Last week, after ten years of trying, what is now the Serbian province of Macedonia obtained recognition as a country from the United States.

The trouble is that Macedonia's southern border abuts Greece, and the northernmost province of Greece is also called Macedonia and has been called that for thousands of years.

"Alexander the Great was from Macedonia," said the President of Greece. "This is OUR Macedonia."

"This is a great day for Macedonia," said the President of Macedonia.

"This unilateral decision will have many negative side effects," said Petros Molyviatis, who is the foreign minister of Greece, referring to Macedonia. He summoned the American ambassador to Greece, Thomas J. Miller, to his office. There they discussed Macedonia.

…flu shot availability here on the East End has been virtually non-existent. It is a scandal within the bigger scandal.

If you fly out of Heathrow airport in London, you will now be going through a security X-ray point that has a new machine that can see through clothes. It produces an anatomically detailed black and white image of the body underneath.

The machine is slowly being phased into use, largely because of the obvious personal concerns that its use raises. At the present time, there are two machines, one operated by a woman for female passengers, and another operated by a man for male passengers. Also, the security company, Liberty Security, is randomly picking out passengers to be put through the machine and then only doing so with personal permission. They explain that the X-rays are a very low dose, the images are not stored, and that the people viewing them are in another room and never see the individual in person.

So far, very few people have objected. Most passengers, 98% of them, according to Liberty, say that if it makes the flight safer, they are all for it.

So far, the American Transport Security Administration has not bought any of these machines. They say they might consider them after a number of privacy issues are addressed.

Sometime late Wednesday night, the pilot of an American F- 16 fighter plane fired a burst of cannon shots at the Little Egg Harbor

Intermediate School on Frog Pond Road in Egg Harbor, New Jersey. About half of them hit, putting holes in the roof and walls. One of the shells hit a desk in the second grade.

No one was injured in this incident, but there was a night watchman and a janitor in the building at the time. The janitor called the police. I think there is a prowler on the roof, she said. The police came. Found nothing. Made a note in the log. In the morning, members of the school administration came to work and called in the police again who found 8 holes in the roof, 8 shell casings inside school and 11 more on the surrounding grounds, some in the woods. It had been a pretty good shot.

School had not been open on the Wednesday before the shooting or the Thursday they found the holes and shells. The teachers had been off at a two day school convention in Atlantic City. The kids stayed home. Surprisingly, the President of the Town School Board was not too concerned about what had happened.

"There will be concerns," he said "but I feel confident that the military has done and is doing everything it can to safeguard against any occurrences of this nature."

The Military is the Warren Grove Firing Range, which occupies thousands of acres of woodland on the other side of the Garden State Parkway not far away. It is there that the pilots of the 177th Fighter Wing of the New Jersey Air National Guard learn how to shoot straight. They take off from Andrews Air Force Base near Washington, and the F-16s come roaring up the Chesapeake and fire these shells at things on the ground inside the Warren Grove Firing Range.

There have been problems before. In 1999, a bombing run went awry and about 11,000 acres of forest burned down. In 2001, an F-16 on a practice run dropped a smoke bomb that burned 1,600 acres. And in January of the following year, a pilot lost control of his F-16, ejected and parachuted down to safety as the plane crashed and burned not far from the Garden State Parkway. Nobody was injured.

I wonder what got smoked in that kid's desk?

In Denver, Nick Palloto was turned away after coming in to ask for a flu shot. "They asked me if I was 65 and I said no, I'm 62. But I am Santa Claus."

He works in a mall. Lots of little kids, many with the flu, come in and sit on his lap to tell him what they want for Christmas. He figured there ought to be an exception made for Santa Claus for that reason. There wasn't.

Incidentally, flu shot availability here on the East End has been virtually non-existent. It is a scandal within the bigger scandal. A few doses made their way to Southampton Hospital where the staff there was inoculated. That was it. I know of nobody else who has gotten a flu shot here. The Senior Center in East Hampton on Springs-Fireplace Road got a notice from the Suffolk County Health Department that the County would be out on October 27 to give shots, and so they sent out fliers to the neighborhood, but at the last minute the County cancelled. The expected vaccine did not arrive.

Two musicians on the west coast, one in Los Angeles and the other in Seattle, composed songs together by mail. One would think up something, write it down, put a stamp on an envelope and send it to the other who would add to it and send it back. In the end, they had enough music to make a CD and so they got

Food And Gas

We Are Pumping Too Much Gas And Eating Too Much Food

By Dan Rattiner

Here we are, our boys fighting in Iraq (the country with the second largest oil reserves on the planet) and most of us are driving around in the biggest, most gas guzzling SUVs imaginable. We're big, porky people now, those of us here in the homeland, and we chomp on Whoppers and Big Macs and Kentucky Fried Chicken, and I suppose we have come to own these big SUVs because for the most part we can no longer comfortably wedge ourselves into anything smaller than that.

Did you know that a big problem for the airlines just now is the increase in what they have to spend for fuel, not only because the prices have gone up, but because so many more gallons have to be in the plane to lift up all these overweight Americans that are shoehorned into their seats? Americans are, on average, twenty pounds heavier than they were twenty years ago. They are not taller. It is not muscle. It is fat. On a 200 seat airplane, the extra cost of lifting this extra four thousand pounds of blubber every year runs into the tens of millions of dollars, hundreds of millions if you count it up over ten years.

I cannot say much more on this topic since I am close to twenty pounds overweight myself and own one of the biggest SUVs on the market, the humongous Lincoln Navigator. It gets a pathetic 10.7 miles to the gallon and I know this because it displays its cumulative gas mileage right there on my dashboard, and after a year of waddling around — both me and the Navigator — it has done and redone its cal-

NO EATING OR DRINKING ON THE STREETS PLEASE

By Dan Rattiner

Officials for small villages are typically paid just a few thousand dollars a year. Once a week, they might attend a meeting or two, which could last an hour or, if things get rowdy, all day and all evening. Most of these officials try to do their jobs in a democratic fashion. But a few do not. Thus was the case, for many years, at the Village of Ocean Beach, a summer community of about 500 families that spreads a few hundred yards to the east and to the west on Fire Island where the ferry comes in from the mainland.

There are no cars allowed on Fire Island, and people walk along a single boardwalk that parallels the beach, stopping in at the dozen or so stores that are arrayed along its sides. A little red wagon, a child's toy, is the transportation of choice for things you have to carry from the stores to your home. You pull it.

The Mayor of Ocean Beach, beginning right after World War II when tourists started coming out on the ferry to the beach there, began passing very strict laws of dubious constitutionality to keep law and order. He was a powerful man and during the next half century, right up until almost the present day, these draconian ordinances have been kept on the books, modified from time to time, but enforced to the letter by the police and the offenders brought to trial twice a week in a tiny courtroom overseen by one judge, Benjamin Mehlman. The community came to be known as "the land of no," and the no was provided by Mr. Mehlman, who earned only $500 a year for his efforts, but who administered the "no" with great confidence and dignified amusement for forty five years, from 1958 until 1993 when, approaching eighty, he retired.

Though Fire Island is a bit to the west of the circulation of Dan's Papers, I thought it would not be unfair to mark the passage of this man, who left this Earth last week at the age of 94, full of years, leaving behind three children, two grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. There are many people now in the Hamptons who will remember him, not too unfondly, one hopes.

Mel Brooks of Water Mill is one of them. There is a law in Ocean Beach which allows you to leave your trash out for only a certain amount of time, time enough for the driver of the four by four trash truck to come down the beach to empty it, but not for long after that. A neighbor complained. A summons was issued to Mr. Brooks.

At the time, Mel Brooks was already very well known as the major Hollywood and Broadway actor, director and writer he is today, and the word leaked out to the press. At the appointed hour in that small courtroom, there was Judge Mehlman, reporters from the New York Times, Newsday and all the TV networks. Brooks sent his lawyer. But that was not good enough for the judge.

"He will be down here in fifteen minutes or I shall issue a bench warrant for his arrest," Mehlman said.

Brooks appeared. "I throw myself upon the mercy of the court," he said.

Mehlman fined him $2, the standard amount culations and finally settled in at this disgusting 10.7.

What makes me so special that I need a monstrous SUV? Well, you never know when you are going to have to cart around a fully armored little league football team. Also, I drive on the beach. I watch the surfers and the fishermen and the birds and seals and oil tankers rumbling and heaving mightily on the horizon as they bring foreign oil to American ports. It's a special thing. I write articles on my laptop on the beach, in a beach chair in nice weather and sitting in the car when the weather is inclement, and so in the car I need a wide, comfy seat to sit in, and of course, I need four wheel drive to drive on the beach. Also, on the highway, if I get into a head on collision, I want to WIN and, and, blah blah, blah.

I really think owning an SUV and being overweight are very related. The icing on the cake, you should excuse me, was when I was having an ice cream sundae with whipped cream with a friend, and when we were done I waddled with him out to the parking lot to his, uh, Hummer.

"I decided I want to make a statement," he said. "I got this just last week. The kids love it."

And so I decided to do something about all this. On November 1, when the lease for my Navigator ended, I went out and found a new beach vehicle that uses 40% less gasoline, according to the sticker. It was an easy decision. And so this year if I drive the same number of miles that I always do, I still will have gotten to where I want to go and I should not have to use 1,000 gallons of gasoline that I needed last year. And it still goes on the beach.

I have also decided that when this lease is up, I will get something that uses even less gas. Maybe they'll have electric cars by that time. Or maybe cars with a big windmill on the roof that turns around as you go forward and gives you enough electricity to run your car. (Am I on to something?)

Our government is doing absolutely nothing to end our dependence on oil, so I think it is up to us. There are one hundred million cars on the road in America. Do the math. If we all do this, get a car with better gas mileage the next time we get a new car, it will very soon be unnecessary for our government to have to send troops abroad to fight because of our dependency on oil.

I have also decided to do something about the extra twenty pounds of fat that I am carrying around. Frankly, I've never been able to understand this concept that what goes in my mouth comes out around my midsection. (I thought it came out somewhere else.) I could understand it if they said what I slather on my hips seeps inside and turns to fat and even showering won't get it off. THAT makes sense. I also have never been able to understand that eating a carrot does not turn to fat, but eating a Big Mac DOES turn to fat. To be honest, I've always trusted my taste buds. If they like it, I eat it. If they don't, I don't. You'd think they'd know.

Given this stubbornness, I have taken to a concept that DOES make sense to me, which is about the VOLUME I eat. I eat a lot. When I eat a really lot, I bulge until it's digested, just like a python that's just eaten a pig. That makes sense. And nutritionists, in among the stuff about the celery and the carrots, say that all of us Americans eat too much. They talk portion control. They talk about totally unnecessary heaping portions of stuff. And it's true. Food, very good food prepared by very talented chefs and cooks, is everywhere. And there is lots of it. So, simply, I am eating LESS. Half as much. And I think it is going to work. I'm partnering with my car. Me and my car are going to consume half as much. Half as much gasoline and half as much hot fudge sundae. All the time. We shall walk half as lightly on this earth.

I hope you will join me in this plan to reduce the amount of oil and food you and your car consume. Do the food thing for yourself. You don't have to make a big deal about it. But do the gasoline thing for the boys in Iraq. And for the planet, so it won't overheat and kill us. Please send this story to everybody you know. If you want to e-mail it, you'll find it online at danspapers.com. •

At Thanksgiving

Uncles, Second Wives, Aunts, Democrats, Republicans And Cousins

By Janet Berg

Would it be socially acceptable to dump my family and invite myself to eat the holiday meal with total strangers down the block . . . ‘cause I don’t think I can take another Post-Election-Day Feast with my over-zealous politically inclined relatives. Besides, I heard the Johnsons are politically apathetic. So what if their cooking is bland?

Outside the window, I notice the beautiful American flag, frantically waving, trying to get our attention as we enjoy dessert…

I can visualize my surrogate relations now – they’ll have a mellow yellow candle glowing in the window. Maybe all they’ll argue about over dinner is The Wishbone.

Unlike my own kinfolk, where politics is the main course of conversation, and eyebrows are raised along with wine glasses, and “finger foods” have taken on a whole new meaning when a Democrat turns his back to a Republican, or vice versa.

We were like a mixed bag of nuts, at each other’s throats at last year’s Thanksgiving dinner, and it wasn’t even an election year. I do recall the tempestuous outbursts over Bush and Gore in 2000, and the topic of dimpled and pregnant chads.

There was the young ‘I’m- gonna-save-the-world’. United Nations attorney who flew home from Africa for the occasion, his liberal elitist hypocritical Times reporter brother, their passionate bi-partisan ‘Give peace a chance’ little sister, their gun-toting, ‘Look what I shot us for dinner’ father, and their paranoid ‘I mapped out another escape route’ mother-of-the-year.

We also have the opinionated ‘I’ve-stood-by-my-party-since-I-was-old-enough-to-vote’ CEO, the binge-drinking ‘Did-someone-say-PARTY?’ twin college students, and the little nephew, who thought Electoral College was the State school his cousins attended in Pennsylvania.

I just have to mention a few other random oddballs that usually gather with us around the table, like the homophobic Uncle, or gay Cousin Ralph, or Aunt Vicky the Vegan. Auntie made a scene last year when the cook brought out the traditional bird, smothered in gravy. We had to pretend it had Bin Laden’s head on it so she would at least sit, tightlipped, at the table, while we stabbed our forks into it.

“Bad . . . bad bird,” we teased her. “Now, let’s eat!”

But, no one dares to poke fun at “The Chef,” the attitudinal gourmet, not if they’re hungry, anyway. We sit, divided, trying to be civil, biting our tongues, until we are fed. Some of us will be wearing red, others blue . . . well, mostly red, and one token green . . . reading our menus, painstakingly written in fountain pen and hand-placed before each setting, reminding us that it is time to re-examine “the issues:” Foreign Policy, Tax Cuts, Homeland

Security, the Environment, etc.

Conversations of dinners, past, went like this:

Democrat: Global Warming is starting to have an effect on us now more than ever!

Republican: Global Warming? There is no such thing as Global Warming!

Democrat: (with the higher I.Q.) Is too!

Republican: Is not! They said there was Global Cooling in the 70s. They were wrong then, too.

Democrat: Well, Global Warming is starting to show in the Arctic as we speak.

Republican: Have you been talking to those polar bears again?

Aaahhh! Some comic relief before we indulge in our comfort food. The forks are lifted at the negotiating table, and then someone suggests the pre-meal prayer. Undoubtedly, someone else complains about mixing religion and politics, and then, the mental food fight continues. All the "issues" are brought up, again, one by one; the name-calling, the finger-pointing.

Monsieur labeled each delicacy with such care, but after a few drinks, some of the guests got even more obnoxious, and renamed them according to their political taste, from "Ass-cargots al la Edwards," and "Vicious-Sòise a la Debate," to "Smoked Pot a la Lot Soufflé," and "Dijon Gay Day Flambé" . . . Another glass of wine, please. . . to "ala Bush fula Crap Suzette," "Your Candied-ate-Sucks Yams," "Kerry Berry Tart;" I think you get the drift. Oh, and the cheesecake arrives in the shape of the White House.

All the recipes are so confidential, even the Secret Service can't break the code. Except for the turkey caucus . . I mean, carcass . . . that's a given — kill bird - cook bird- eat bird — this poor guest of honor never got pardoned.

With my belly full, I think how the holiday has taken a markedly different direction since 1621, when the Pilgrims and Indians celebrated the first Thanksgiving in Plymouth, Massachusetts.

I've tried my hardest to remain open-minded over the past four years, and to vote for the 'better' candidate on November 2, 2004, but I have to admit, after I figured out how to pull those defective levers on the voting machine, I still wasn't sure I chose the right . . . I mean, the correct politician, by the time I left.

Speaking of political food for thought, here's something we should all digest as Americans — it's obvious, we enjoy unparalleled affluence, and the United States has one of the highest standards of living in the world, with equal opportunity for all, no matter what our socio-economic status is. Most of us are lucky enough to afford a sense of humor whenever we need it, which we are FREE to express because we have enough food to put on our plates. Perhaps, the sad question of the day is, "Can people who go without food have a sense of humor?" We're Americans, but we're humans first, and we have to think about that answer when we feast at the holidays.

Like one of our surfer diners said at the dinner table, "You know, it doesn't matter who's in office, the cycle of political eras just go up and down . . . you gotta ride 'em out like a wave, man . . . you just gotta ride 'em out!"

Outside the window, I notice the beautiful American flag, frantically waving, trying to get our attention as we enjoy dessert, and we notice that one of the kids has fallen asleep, curled up under the table. We leave him be, while the adults depart into the family room and break out the deck of infamous Iraqi MOST WANTED Playing Cards, until it's time to go.

Now, almost everyone's gone home, and the house is quiet once again, until we notice the sleeping boy is still under the table. His family, who left fifteen minutes ago, actually forgot him. We move the tablecloth to the side, so we can adore the innocent little lad in this state of PEACE under the negotiating table.

"It's time to put the "No Child Left Behind Act into effect!" someone says, and is answered in unison by the others, "Shut up!"

You know, now that I think about it, I must really love my zany family, 'cause I'm looking forward to Christmas dinner, too. That's when someone's goose gets cooked!

Going, Going, Gone

If Nothing Is Done, The College Buildings Will Go Under The Wrecking Ball

By Alan Michael Braveman

Sometime in September 2005, big, ugly, loud and noisy bulldozers could be flattening the buildings on the rolling hills of Southampton College. They will eradicate the last vestiges of a beautiful dream that a few audacious souls dared to call Southampton College.

Collage: Pratt Hall at Southampton College and bulldozer

Thus, this lazy, ill planned, poorly maintained but engaging home for dreamers for the last 40 years will vanish in a few short weeks. It is expected that only two or possibly three buildings will be left standing on the campus. This potential disaster does not include the Marine Science complex which is off the campus proper and soon to be a yearly rental for SUNY which has an option to renew, much like leasing a car.

Among the few other buildings that will most probably be left standing is Chancellors Hall, which houses laboratories, classrooms, a theater (lecture hall), administrative offices, some catering facilities, snack machines, and the WLIU radio station. This building may become the hub of campus activities for the graduate school, continuing education and whatever other activities still function on the shrunken campus, but it is a building with no soul or warmth. The old library could survive, as the graduate school and the marine science students will need access to a library, along with one or two librarians. The highly touted $60 million new library has had most of its exterior now finished, so it may also survive as some sort of structure for use by students. But it would be totally in keeping with LIUs policy if they went ahead and finished installing the windows and doors, completed the exterior and then tore the whole thing down.

The various dormitory buildings, in disrepair for so many years, will finally meet their maker along with Wood Hall, the business center, the greenhouse, the gymnasium, Abney Peak, Avram Hall, the Cottages and the assorted trailers and abandoned cars, along with the old Queen Ann lounge where the female college students had to sign in and out before they could leave the campus and some of the most creative late night chess games were played. Pratt Hall, the original Tucker Mill Inn building or Southampton Hall as it was once known, was the center of most activities in the early days of the college and was recently renovated with a multi-million dollar gift from the Pratt family. It will probably be among the first buildings to be torn down. It holds a plethora of poignant memories for students, faculty and alumni, from all its various incarnations. It is also one of the more visually attractive buildings on campus and has the most spectacular view of the bay; ergo, it will not survive the invasion of the McMansions or whatever follows the demise of Southampton College.

The Windmill will survive, but alas, not at the college. It too, has far too many memories attached to leave it in its present location or as the constant reminder of what was. It will not be left in place. LIU cannot afford to leave any memorials behind.

Left standing after the bulldozers finish will be 40 years of memories and yearbooks, dashed hopes and dreams, and a squandered experiment in exciting education that failed for the sake of a few dollars and large quantities of greed and mismanagement.

There is a possible savior emerging. “Save Southampton College inc.,” a not-for-profit group made up of students, alumni, faculty, former administrators, elected officials and townspeople has been able to slow LIUs destructive pace. They are fighting to keep Southampton College in Southampton. They want to keep the bulldozers away from Southampton College and all its buildings. They have plans to possibly buy the college or at least have it become part of SUNY. The group has been instrumental in causing public officials to decry LIUs original plan to sell the campus to the highest bidder, and this public attention has caused LIU to alter their plans. Save Southampton College has the backing of every right-minded citizen in Suffolk County and they are raising money to fight LIU every step of the way. They are indirectly responsible for the SUNY bargain, though it may be a bargain with the devil; it too has altered LIUs plans.

The more the public becomes aware of the enormity of the loss of Southampton College, the more difficult it is for LIU to proceed with their plans. “Save Southampton College” is a slogan, a battle cry, a group with one purpose: fight LIU to a standstill. Prevent the dismantling of the college, keep Southampton College alive and well, and not in just two or three buildings but as a thriving community of teachers, students, administrators, alumni, and townspeople. Just as it has been for 40 years, but perhaps managed a lot better.

Confession

Generosa Ammon. Now, Mr. Meyer, Mrs. Ammon's divorce from Ted Ammon didn't happen, did it?"

"Considering that her husband was now dead, Mr. Holmes, no it didn't. He was murdered just two weeks before it was to be signed."

"So Generosa got everything, not half. And then she got disillusioned with her new hubby, Daniel Pelosi, didn't she?"

"Yes, she did."

"So she wanted you to create a post-nuptial agreement with Mr. Pelosi on her behalf, saying that in the event of her demise, which subsequently did happen, Mr. Pelosi was only to get a certain sum. Now what did she originally think that would be?"

"One million dollars."

"But he got a two million dollar settlement, you told the court. And you've testified that was because why?"

"Because Mr. Pelosi told me in private that he had obtained the hard drive to the surveillance system on the night of the murder and it had incriminating scenes involving Generosa Ammon."

"Now Mrs. Ammon is no longer here to refute it. And it seems you are being a little hard on Mr. Pelosi to bring it to the attention of the court at this time. Isn't it true that you were enamored of Mrs. Ammon at this point, and so you wanted to pin the murder on Mr. Pelosi? And furthermore, you've been in love with her for a long time and, completely smitten, you are actually the one who did the murder?"

"Completely untrue."

"Now I should like to turn to the woman on the damask sofa over there by the window. Do not hide from me. I know who you are, Mrs. Lukert, Mrs. Barbara Lukert. You are Mr. Pelosi's sister, are you not?"

"Yes, I am."

"And your brother had you spy on Mr. Ammon on the laptop he lent you, isn't that true? And you've told this court that on the night of the murder, your brother came to your house, looked at Mr. Ammon at his house and then picked up some heavy object — you could feel it under his jacket, and drove to Ammon's house and stayed there all night.

"But you went a different route to the Ammon house in East Hampton, didn't you? And because you knew your brother would stop at the 7-Eleven for a couple of six packs, you were able to get there first and kill Mr. Ammon."

lost so many historic homes in recent years. The Bunshaft House on Georgica Pond in East Hampton, neglected for years, is now a ruin. The Bayberryland House in the Sebonac section of Noyac was torn down six months ago to make way for a golf course. The Potter house, the historic oceanfront property in East Hampton formerly owned by Billy Joel, was torn down by new owner Jerry Seinfeld. And the historic Jackson house in Hampton Bays was torn down just three weeks ago.

As far as Captain Jeremiah Ludlow's house was concerned, Grossman and Howe seem to have been intent upon keeping up its old appearance. The builder they hired said that the back of the house was on the verge of collapsing, and so they applied for a permit to tear that part of the house down but keep the front. Then a week before the partial tear down was to begin, the builder said that on further inspection, the whole house was beyond repair. So Grossman and Howe went back to the Town Board on October 25 and paid $7,000 for a full demolition permit. And so the thing was torn down on October 27. Without anyone from the town either down there to confirm the place was beyond repair or even interested in going.

One only hopes that whatever is going up — which apparently involves steel, to judge by the I-beams now in place — will be in keeping with what Captain Ludlow might have approved. But only Grossman and Howe and the architect and the Town Building Inspector know for sure. And the rest of us will just have to wait and see. • some musicians together and recorded one. They called themselves the U. S. Postal Service in honor of the way they had put it all together. The album, called "Give Up" was a huge hit for a first effort. 400,000 copies were sold.

The Postal Service sued. Had a summons personally delivered by process server — not by the mailman — demanding that the U. S. Postal Service cease and desist from using the name U. S. Postal Service for their rock group. It was copyrighted.

The U. S. Postal Service (the band, not the mail service) went public with all of this, and there was such an outpouring of support for them — letters to the Postal Service and so forth — that the higher ups took a look at what was going on and they, too, agreed this was ridiculous.

After discussing it with their lawyers, they met with the U. S. Postal Service band and gave them a paper allowing them to use that name in exchange for the U. S. Postal Service, the band, doing advertisements and TV commercials to promote the U. S. Postal Service. The U. S. Postal Service, the band, will perform at the postmaster general's annual National Executive Conference in Washington on November 17. Also, the U. S. Postal Service will sell the U. S. Postal Service CDs on its web site.

Everybody's happy. I wonder if there is a band called Macedonia? • for the offense at that time, but not before he finished a twenty minute lecture about vermin, pestilence, good manners, the bubonic plague, the rights of the neighbors, littering, knights in armour and barbarians after the collapse of the Roman Empire.

Another law on the books in the Land of No involved eating ice cream on the street. You weren't supposed to do that, or be seen eating or drinking anything else as you walked along. And so one day, before Judge Mehlman there came two teenagers, who had been ticketed for eating one chocolate chip cookie each. Mehlman, somehow, found them not guilty on a technicality.

Also let off on a technicality was a man who had put a set of wind chimes on his front porch. A neighbor on one side asked that the chimes be removed. He said they made too much noise. They stayed up. The neighbor called the police and they came and ticketed the man, who then appeared before Judge Mehlman. Mehlman ruled that the law was not written to specifically prohibit wind chimes, and he declared the man not guilty of any crime. He was free to go. And the wind chimes remained.

Judge Mehlman will be missed. •

Confession

"That is a complete lie."

"Why did you kill Mr. Ammon? Could it be that his Wall Street firm had the mortgage on your house and were foreclosing? Could that have been it? And then you had your brother to pin it on?"

"This is so ridiculous."

"What is ridiculous, Mrs. Lukert?'

"Well, let us turn for a minute to you over there by the fireplace. You are Kathryn Ann Mayne, the nanny and baby sitter for the Ammon's two children. Is that not true?"

"Yes, it is."

"And the fact is that Mr. Ammon was murdered, and Mrs. Ammon died of breast cancer afterwards and now you have a lifetime tenancy at this big East Hampton mansion to raise the children, don't you?"

"Yes, I do."

"Doesn't this seem a bit strange, Ms. Mayne?"

"I did not kill Mr. Ammon, sir."

"Well, I guess that is it, Inspector," Holmes said, turning to the man he had come in with. "Please come here. I will tell you who the murderer is."

The Inspector came closer. Holmes leaner forward. And suddenly, Holmes grabbed the Inspector's handcuffs and put them on him.

"Holmes, what the devil are you doing?"

"Arresting the killer, Inspector. It is you, isn't it? Isn't it? You lost more than a million dollars to Ted Ammon at a poker game the night before the murder, didn't you? And you could not pay it. So the next day, Mr. Ammon had you sign a second mortgage on your home for him. We have the papers, Inspector, don't lie. And then you found out that Mr. Ammon was having an affair with your wife, didn't you? Your psychiatrist told us, Inspector, a breach of ethics, but important in a murder case. And so you went over there on the next night, that Saturday night, the first person 'on the scene,' supposedly, after he died, and you spoke to him briefly, pleading with him, and then it turned angry, and then you beat him to a pulp with your billy club. And then you framed poor Daniel Pelosi to make it look like he did it, didn't you?"

"How could you know?" the Inspector sobbed. "How did you find out? I didn't mean to kill him."

"Stop making up stories, Inspector," Sherlock said. "And how did I find out? When I asked you if you had any matches so I could light my pipe earlier today, you said for me to look in the pocket of your coat, didn't you? And there, I found a poker chip. One of the very chips that you played against Ammon with two nights earlier. And there was blood on that chip. Ammon's blood. Here, see for yourself."

Sherlock Holmes held out the poker chip. The Inspector looked at it for a moment and then began sobbing again. And so Holmes took him by the arm and led him to the door. As he opened it, he stopped for a moment, turned, and spoke to the assembled crowd.

"You may all go home now," he said. "Thank you very much."

And then he was gone. •

The Sheltered Islander

By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #325

Dumb and Dumber

No doubt the earliest Euro settlers of Shelter Island observed Thanksgiving, but unlike the rest of the country, turkey was not at the center of the feast. Minutes of research on my part have revealed to me that deer, not turkey, was served by the early hareleggers. Let me make my case.

You see, Shelter Island deer are not the same as Long Island deer. They may look the same, but like a Macintosh and a PC, one can think and one needs patches all the time. Just as the animals in Australia evolved differently from the animals on other continents, the Shelter Island deer developed differently from their East End cousins.

Shelter Island deer were once part of the mainland Long Island herd, but when Shelter Island broke free from Long Island at the end of the last Ice Age, the deer packs became separated. We know this is true because it is unlikely that deer from Sag Harbor or Greenport could have made the swim to Shelter Island across the deep channels and strong currents. Let's face it. If the currents can push a ferry full of cars around, which weigh many tons, it could shove a deer to Greenland. Also, we have to remember that the venison brain is the size of a grape as evidenced by the fact that it cannot think of any alternatives to standing still in the road watching headlights grow bigger as it listens to a honking horn. No one can convince me that deer ever had the problem solving skills or motivation to get to Shelter Island. Deer are dumb.

Therefore, all the deer on Shelter Island have been isolated for generations and are severely inbred, which makes them dumber. I recall an incident about four years ago in front of my residence. A deer leapt through the back window of a passing car. The front of the animal was completely inside the car. There are only two explanations for this; 1) this was a smart deer with a plan to escape bow & arrow hunting season. Admittedly, there were a few design flaws in this plan, but overall, I'd say it was very good for a deer. Or 2) This deer was dumber than a bucket of shucked shells and was trying to cross the road via the backseat of a Toyota because its moronic brain could not project that delaying its leap for one full second would have reduced the chances of colliding with the car by 100%.

It's a good thing deer are herbivores, because if they had to catch other game for food, they would starve to death. G-d knew how dumb deer were and that's why the Divine One sprinkled berry bushes all around the Island. He knew the bushes couldn't outrun the deer. It's just one of those handy pieces of information you get to know when you're G-d.

Shelter Island allows deer hunting by three methods — bow & arrow, gun, and front grill. Athletic people use the bow, arrows and guns, the non-athletics use the grill kill method. Death by Buick is probably the most frequently listed cause of death on Deer Death Certificates filed on Shelter Island. About 12 years ago, my own sweet mother brought home a buck tied across the hood of her Falcon. We thought she just went to the IGA for bread and milk.... who knew?

Which all connects back to how venison became the meat served at Thanksgiving by the early Islanders.

The settlers would be trying to make the ferry line before it got too long, like five carriages. Sure, laugh... but remember the Clarks were only running a one-carriage ferry in those days. So, there they were, speeding for the line when BAM! Out of the blue, a deer leaps into the path of the only carriage that has come through that way all day. Why? Because its moronic brain could not project that delaying it's leap for one full second would have reduced the chances of colliding with the carriage by 100%.

The settlers were practical people. What's the point of hunting a fowl that feeds six, when you can speed around the Island with complete confidence that a dinner suggestion for twelve will leap to mind soon.

Venison, stuffed with breading and oysters, corn on the cob, clams on the half, plum wine from Plum Island, and those homestyle brownies from Ye Olde IGA... that was the original Shelter Island Thanksgiving Dinner!

Alice Downs Dart: 1911- 2004

Celebrating A Long Life Lived To The Fullest In A Small Town

By Karen Lund

Alice Downs Dart will be missed this holiday season at her home on Main Bayview here in Southold. She lived adjacent to her son's Christmas Tree Farm, and she lived there all her life.

During the several years that I have been choosing my Christmas trees from those in the fields behind her house, Alice Dart became a link for me to Southold's past and present. Having just bought an historic home in Southold myself, I was always on the lookout for others of the same vintage and admired the shaker-shingled home that was Alice's. I was just beginning to understand that living in Southold and on the North Fork is not just about owning a home, but about taking part in a community life that is grounded in a love of people, history, the land and the arts. Alice Downs Dart personified all of those North Fork qualities. I only regret that I never took the time to strike up a real conversation with her. On my Christmas trips, when I saw her in her backyard, she had a ready smile and I knew she provided a link to Southold's past.

After learning of Alice's passing in September, I realized that I missed an opportunity to talk to this interesting woman. And after speaking with her daughter, Patricia Mildford, I know I missed an opportunity to make a great friend. As I suspected, Alice has left us a legacy of what it means to be brought up in Southold and how a woman can contribute to the vital life of this wonderful hamlet. Alice's approach to life, to work hard at things she loved, is a shared philosophy of old and new residents. Her influence on her children included her love of music, gardening and history.

Alice Downs Dart

Moving to Southold in 1918 at the age of seven, Alice was raised on her father's farm in and participated to all aspects of his farming. She hoed, weeded and even packed sprouts that would be transported by train to markets in New York City. Her father's influence also extended to thinking outside the confines of Southold by his support and membership in the then-new Custer Institute, our local observatory. This rural existence could be seen as isolating, but Alice either intentionally or intuitively sought to expand her horizons at an early age. She used her love of literature to vicariously live through the characters of the classics. Her interests in the arts and her talents led her to participate in local theatre and to play the piano. Her love of literature brought her to organize the reading of such classics as Christmas in Maine. Alice's love of history led her to conduct studies for the Southold Historical Society, such as a history of the development of the submarine here on the North Fork. Being a season ticket-holder to community concerts, Alice supported the arts in its many forms.

Alice graduated as valedictorian in 1929 from Southold High School. She married Alfred Dart, a teacher from upstate New York, in 1933 and settled into her family home. She worked in a car dealership, an insurance agency and at the Dart farmstand.

Being a woman who sought experiences beyond the borders of Southold, she readily made friends with summer residents and visitors. However, being a woman who also valued her rural life that was rich in the arts, she cultivated and made friends with many year-round residents, spanning several generations. Patricia explained to me that her mother realized that, as she got older, she was loosing her old friends and contact with her community. So Alice became deternined to make new friends to remain vital and to be seen as a contributor to all. Shortly before her passing, Alice taught her daughter's friends the old art of making braided rugs.

While shopping in town and engaging in community activities, Patricia has not been too surprised to have been approached by women of all ages asking after her mother. She knew Alice valued new friends and old and now sees this as her mother's legacy to her family and community. Alice Downs Dart was a woman of the North Fork who personified all of its best qualities – diligence, community, and valuing the past while working toward the future. She will be missed.

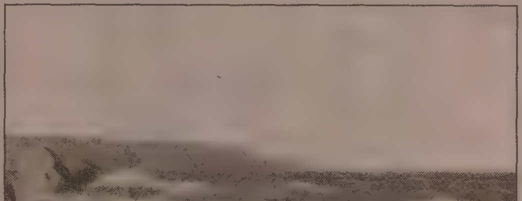
Homeless On The East End

The decision to sell our beautiful, renovated farmhouse in Cutchogue was a difficult one. With over a year's worth of work behind us and a glorious home and outbuildings to show for it – the house was featured on the cover of Dan's Papers Home Guide on May 7 of this year – it took some real soul searching before my husband David and I made the decision to sell. But there was a good reason: we had found a great cottage out in Orient that sits atop a high bluff and has amazing, panoramic views to Connecticut across Long Island Sound.

The thought of renting out the farmhouse didn't seem appropriate to us at all. We felt it was a family home and, being an antique, needed gentle handling. So on the market it went and in no time thrilled buyers, a New York couple with three young children, snapped it up almost on sight. I love the idea of those kids discovering all the nooks and crannies of those lovely grounds, playing hide and seek in the barn, and exploring the chicken coop I had, in a fleeting Martha Stewart moment, painted with the hope they would someday use it as a playhouse. There is the bittersweet ending to that wonderful restoration project. I sleep easy at night knowing that we gave a gracefully aging lady a much needed facelift and that she is now so much appreciated, like a beloved maiden aunt, by her new owners. But back – or should I say out – to Orient.



"Sound Breakers" by East Marion artist Scarmato

Adding another twenty minutes or so to our commute on Friday evenings from Manhattan may not sound like much, but having lived in both East Hampton and Southampton, we are all too familiar with the longing associated with that nagging children's question, "Are we there yet?" I think, even as adults, we never stop asking this after hours in a car, we just stop asking it out loud. After all, as grown-ups in charge of the situation, not to mention the car, this is self-inflicted, right? Somehow that doesn't seem to ease the pain.

The trade-off of those extra minutes is, however, quite extraordinary. Orient feels to us, who are used to being surrounded by fairly flat farm fields on both Forks, less agricultural and more like New England with its rolling hills on the Sound to the north and quaint, historic village on Orient Bay to the south. But whether the extra commuting time will wear us down remains to be seen as, for the time being, having closed on the Cutchogue farmhouse and still waiting to close on Orient, we are officially homeless on the East End. And that brings with it some interesting options.

Visitors spending the weekend – or longer – on the North Fork can choose between many beautiful B&Bs, such as the Orient Inn (story coming soon on top B&B picks for the holidays), and several boutique hotels. Our homeless state has given us the opportunity (excuse?) to sample a few and, along with a review of the stylish bistro, we try out the newly expanded Greenporter Hotel and La Cuvee Bistro on page 45 of this issue's Wine Guide.

Readers of Dan's North Fork will have noticed that Marion Wolberg Weiss, Dan's Papers longtime and well-respected art critic, has been visiting some of our local galleries, much to my delight. Marion, a professor who frequently teaches courses on contemporary film, brings a wealth of knowledge to her task. See this week's review of Shelter Island's Boltax Gallery on page 43.

It is increasingly uncommon these days for people to live in one town their entire lives, but Alice Downs Dart, who moved to Southold in 1918 at the age of seven, never left the North Fork village until her death this past September. She is remembered in a tribute by Dan's North Fork contributor Karen Lund on page 41.

You know, of course, that the East End is home to many vineyards, but did you know that there is a vineyard in Nassau County, right in the middle of the North Shore's Old Brookville? My father, having moved from England with his family, landed there during the Gilded Age of the great estates built by robber barons such as Phipps, Astor and Gould, and attended, along with local farmer Johnny Youngs – a descendant of an old North Shore family – what they called "Frog College," a little red schoolhouse in the woods. Frog College is long gone, but the farmstand, run by the Youngs family, still stands on Hegeman's Lane, right across from Johnny's house, but a little farther down on the same road there are also some Chardonnay vines, a rather strange sight in this part of the world. Dan's North Fork "Over The Barrel" columnist Lenn Thompson talks about the trials and triumphs, faced by Villa Banfi's Old Brookville Vineyards, of growing vines and making wine (page 47) in the backyard of Long Island's Gold Coast.

Hopefully, though David and I won't be enjoying our turkey this year in Orient, we will be the proud owners of a house by the sea before the snow flies and Dan's Papers takes its short winter break just before Christmas. Maybe by then I will know the answer to "Are we there yet?" Though I suspect I already do.

North Fork ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

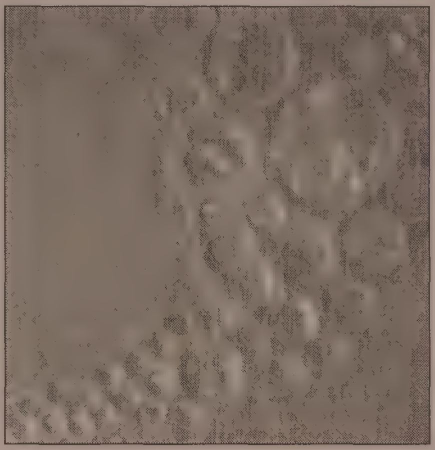
"EARLY FROST" AT BOLTAX GALLERY

There are some intriguing contradictions at work at Shelter Island's Boltax Gallery. The most obvious is its new location, now on Route 114 versus its old Historic District site. The present venue is bigger, lighter and more accessible.

The other contradiction concerns the two shows now on view. The current exhibits are works by Sylvia Hommert, titled " Early Frost"; the other display derives from the gallery's first exhibit of the season featuring works from Argentina Ms. Hommert's pieces are monochromatic, primarily whites and variations on whites, mirroring the show's theme. Conversely, the pieces from Argentina are bold reds, oranges and earth tones, reflecting the indigenous culture.



Work by S. Hommert

Moreover, both presentations convey opposing ambiences: "Early Frost" is reflective and minimal while the South American works are festive and busy. Yet, we can reverse these moods. For example, Ms. Hommert's pieces are festive in their way as well. Regarding their minimalism, we can also find complex design patterns in Bavaria's serene countryside, a site that initially inspired the artist.

In fact, the more we look, the more we see. Some of Ms. Hommert's patterns recall cell divisions or any number of items which may be placed under a microscope. They even suggest blisters, another contradiction, intense as it is.

Another series, resembling an installation mounted to the wall, provides an opposing aesthetic element integrated within the design. Thus, the juxtaposition of white with shards of green and blue accounts for a potent presentation. Such configurations also seem to shift positions as the spectator moves in or out to get a better view. This kind of dynamic is perhaps Ms. Hommert's greatest strength.

Of the many works in the Argentina show, our favorites include Joan Torcoletti's burning chair sitting in the middle of a road and Jade Martin's abstract mixed media. Particularly with the first piece, there's a magic realism at work that's arresting and thought-provoking. And although Ms. Hommert's style is not literally realistic, there's certainly "magic" there.

The current show will be on view at Shelter Island's Boltax Gallery until Dec. 31. Call 631 - 749 - 4062 for hours. Marion Wolberg Weiss, Dan's Papers Art Commentary columnist, is a guest columnist here in Dan's North Fork.

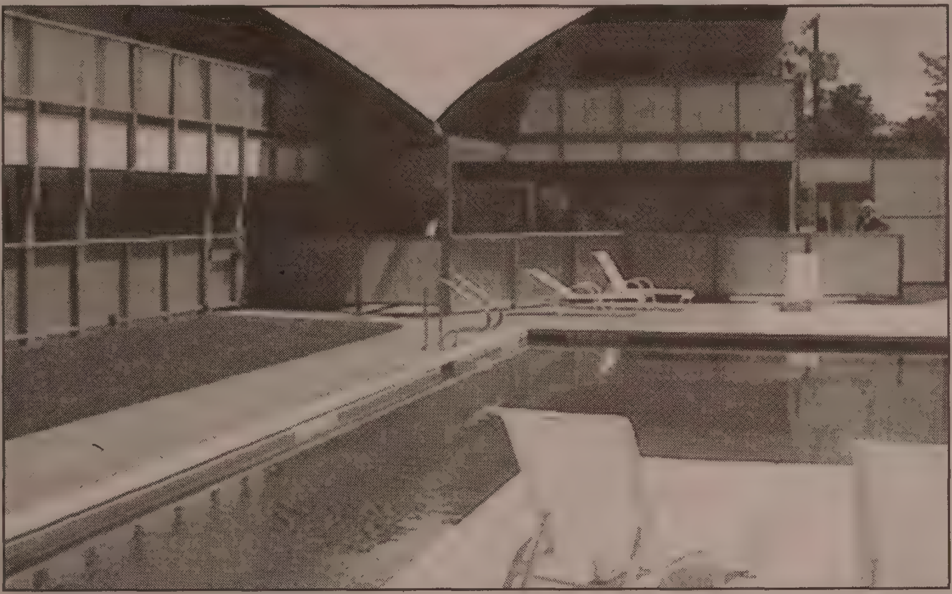
La North Fork

French Food, Euro- Chic Lodgings And International Vintages In Downtown Greenport

By Susan Whitney Simm

Having lived on the East End, at least part-time, for the past twenty years, I find it hard to shake off the stubborn stereotypes, such as the streets rolling up after Labor Day, that still cling to these parts. This is especially true of the North Fork, regarded by some (usually South Fork snobs) as the Hamptons' poor cousin.



Well, as a recent weekend-long visit to The Greenporter Hotel attests, times they sure are a-changin.' On a particularly quiet non-holiday weekend in November – no ferry lines to and from Shelter Island and a breezy commute back to the city – the newly-expanded hotel was at three-quarters capacity and the chic dinner crowd on Saturday night at La Cuvee, the hotel's stylish bistro, was bustling.

The ambience of the hotel, which will soon boast a 5,000 square-foot spa on-site, is sleek and minimal, but not at the expense of very comfy beds with down duvets and deep soaking tubs. I particularly liked the fact that the sink in our room, a deep porcelain bowl perched on black granite, was located outside of the WC, with plenty of room to spread out toiletries, toothbrushes, etc. All rooms have TVs and individual thermostats (unlike many B&Bs) as well as Internet access, although we were at a loss as to how to hook up our laptop (we opted to forgo email for the weekend, though the hotel graciously offered to let us use one of their computers to check our mail). A beautiful courtyard pool area, complete with whirlpool spa (which was actually open until it snowed the next morning!), surely entices summer visitors to swim and lounge. But it was the proximity of the bistro – which offers room service if you're feeling anti-social or just self-indulgent – that made our stay especially comfortable.

> The ambience of the hotel is sleek and minimal, but not at the expense of very comfy beds with down duvets and deep soaking tubs. The proximity of the bistro – which offers room service if you're feeling anti-social or just self-indulgent – made our stay especially comfortable.

The concept of the food at La Cuvee, according to owner/chef Deborah Rivera, is French international, but many of the ingredients are home-grown. Rivera is a charming, sophisticated woman, made even more so by her utter lack of pretense, who runs a management consulting firm in Manhattan, having done stints in the financial world as an investment banker and derivatives analyst. She lived in Paris for two years where she experienced all the international food of the country – including Asian, Tunisian and African cuisines – as well as in India and Mexico where the French had colonies and brought parts of these cuisines back to France.

"People forget that 'cinco de mayo' is a Mexican celebration of Mexico's victory against the French," says Rivera. "You will find Latin and Asian influences in some of our dishes at La Cuvee as well because those cuisines have influenced French cooking, too. I laughed when I read an article in Wine Spectator about 'la Taillevent' (the renowned Paris restaurant with three Michelin stars) in which the owner criticized the emergence of French fusion. He bragged that they remain a true French restaurant without 'foreign influences.' In the same article he published a recipe for one of their signature dishes 'au cari.' Apparently he thinks that curry is French."

The very interesting wine list at La Cuvee is international as well, dotted with "offspring of vinifera from all around the world, not just France," including Italy, Spain, Lebanon, Israel, South Africa, Australia, Greece and Tunisia. The list rotates every three months, includes many local wines, and does NOT include any from California. But the fascinating thing about the list is that nearly every wine is available by the glass.

My husband David and I began an evening at La Cuvee, where we were offered a tasting menu, with "Petites Roulades de Printemps" – mini duck confit spring rolls made with Crescent Duck farms of Aquebogue duck and organic baby bok choy and carrots from Cutchogue's Satur farms, rolled into crisp wonton wrappers and served with a soy-ginger dipping sauce. The pairing with the Lenz Gewurztraminer (2001) – truly one of the North Fork's great wines, made by the incomparable Eric Fry – was perfect.

Next came "Bisque a l'hommard," a fabulous lobster bisque made with fresh herbs, white wine and finished with a hint of sherry. The house sparkler, Marquis de la Tour, from France but not from Champagne, was a delicious accompaniment with perfectly balanced fruit and yeast.

The menu also offers a selection of charcuterie ($14), the highlight of which is currently Rivera's excellent homemade duck pate seasoned with fresh herbs (the last of which were picked just before the snow!) black peppercorns and truffle oil, "a Burgundian recipe," served with cornichons, French mustard and dried sausages.

The "selection de fromages" ($8 for 3/$11 for 5/Seven for $15) showcases the world's great cheeses. Our sampling included Morbier (an aged raw milk sheep cheese from France), chevre rolled in herbs de Provence so redolent of lavender it made me wish for summer, and imported Reblochon, a very ripe, contraband version of which I once smuggled (successfully) into the country from St. Bart's where the unaged raw milk version is legal (it is illegal to import raw milk cheese that is aged less than 60 days into the US).

We tasted both the Cinsault/Cabernet Sauvigon from Hochar Pere et Fils (Lebanon, $9) and the Greg Norman Cabernet Merlot (1999, Australia, $14) with the cheese and meats. Both were fruity and tasty, but the Greg Norman was sensational with a long, lovely finish and exceptionally smooth tannins.

The very good French onion soup ($8) is made with a vegetarian stock and is topped with a Gruyere-laden crouton made of crusty, country bread from Aldo's (home of the great biscotti in Greenport) and the house-cured Gravlax-style salmon, served with blini at dinner and bagels and cream cheese for breakfast/brunch, is superb. The fish was velvety and piquant. The "Salade Roquefort Greenporter" ($14) is a blend of local mesclun greens, also from Satur Farms, tossed with house vinaigrette, Roquefort cheese, walnuts and grape tomatoes. Delicious.

But the "Moules Indochine," a Vietnamese inspired dish Rivera ate often in Paris, is not to be missed. Mussels in a lemongrass, saffron and sake broth is excellent as either an appetizer ($11) or main course ($19), when it arrives with a side of steamed coconut rice. With this we enjoyed glasses of a wonderful Gewurztraminer from Alsace.

Also excellent is the "Steak au Poivre" ($26), a New York strip steak with a black peppercorn cognac cream sauce, accompanied by a lovely potato gratin and steamed haricots verts, which was served with Yarden Cabernet Sauvignon from Israel. The wine was very full bodied with strong tannins and good fruit.

For brunch the next morning, I couldn't resist the traditional Croque Madame, an open face sandwich of Black Forrest ham, Gruyere and bubbling béchamel sauce topped with a runny poached egg. David opted for the New England Scramble made with some of my favorite sausages, the Portuguese-style Chourico and Linguica, red bell pepper and onions scrambled with two eggs.

The Greenporter Hotel and La Cuvee Bistro is located on Front Street in Greenport. For reservations at either the hotel or restaurant, call 631-477-0066.

OVER THE BARREL... With Lenn Thompson

Five Turkey Day Wine Tips

Choosing wines to serve with your Thanksgiving Day spread can seem a monumental task. Typical Thanksgiving dinners include a plethora of different flavors and textures—turkey (white and dark meat), stuffing that can contain almost anything, rich gravy, sweet potatoes, tart cranberry sauce and sweet pumpkin pie. Add other possibilities like ham, prime rib or even Italian food (like we have) and it can be overwhelming.

It doesn't have to be and it shouldn't be. There's only one rule for matching wines `with Thanksgiving: there are no rules.

Here are some tips and suggestions that I share with friends and co-workers when they ask for my advice. But if you ask ten other wine lovers, you're sure to get ten different answers. That's the great thing about wine...it's so personal. You like what you like and no one else can tell you different.

Tip #1: Start With a Sparkler

Despite what many people think, sparkling wine isn't just for New Years Eve and weddings. No other wine sets a celebratory mood like a nice bottle of bubbly. You don't need to go crazy, spending $100 on a bottle Italian Prosecco and Spanish Cava are often good values...perfect for toasting what you're thankful for this year.

Tip #2: Make it a Tri-Color Holiday

You don't want to pick one kind of red wine and just serve that. Beyond being boring, there's probably at least one person at your table that doesn't like red wine. By offering both red and white, everyone can feel a part of the holiday meal If you get a bright, dry one, you could even serve a Rose as well.

This also allows people to try different wines with different courses to see what they like, which is always fun.

Tip #3: Keep Things Juicy

Your wines should be like your roasted bird – juicy. This isn't the time to uncork that bottle of bold, young California Cabernet Sauvignon you just picked up. It's going to be way too tannic, and it will overpower the milder flavor of turkey. For reds, stick with fruit-forward wines like Shiraz, Beaujolais and Pinot Noir. Merlot can even be a good choice. Just ask your wine merchant about ones that aren't too tannic or oaky.

On the whiter side of things, I usually avoid rich, buttery Chardonnays because, while they may go well with certain parts of the meal (turkey, mashed potatoes) they often lack the acidity to stand up to the rest of the meal. Fruity Viognier is often a nice pairing, but my all-time favorite food-friendly white is Riesling. You shouldn't choose one of the sweeter ones, but a crisp, floral example is great with most any meal. Most of my favorites come from Germany.

Tip #4: Serve Dessert in a Glass

Everyone serves pumpkin pie, but how many people serve dessert wine at the end of a delicious Thanksgiving dinner? Not many, so start a new trend! A lot of people eat so much during the meal that they barely have room for dessert, so serving a small glass of sweet dessert wine can bet a welcome option. Avoid fortified wines like Port – they are usually the reason people think they don't like dessert wines Stick with late harvest whites or, my personal favorite, ice wine. I bet people will be surprised how much they enjoy it.

Tip #5: Don't Leave Out the Leftovers

You know that you're going to have leftover turkey tomorrow for sandwiches, so have some

Old Brookville Vineyards Survive, On A Smaller Scale, Despite Natural Disasters

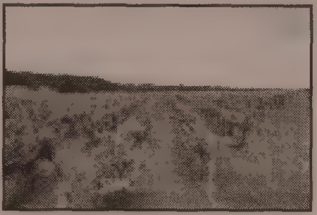
By Lenn Thompson

There are many environmental factors that can adversely affect or even destroy a vineyard's grape crop. From extreme temperatures to phylloxera to animals eating the fruit, vineyard managers have a lot of things to worry about. And over the past several years, Old Brookville Vineyards, the only commercial vineyard in Nassau County, has succumbed to more of these factors than any other Long Island vineyard.

In 1999, the vineyard's forty-seven acres of Chardonnay were completely wiped out by Hurricane Floyd. Two years later, spring frost and heavy fall rains combined to reduce the crop by 50 percent. The very next year, the same combination wiped out the 2002 vintage.

Located in the Village of Old Brookville, a wealthy enclave on the North Shore, the vineyard is the closest of Long Island vineyards by far to New York City and one of only five remaining farms in Nassau County. It is part of the 127-acre private estate that is home to the international headquarters of Banfi Vintners, the nation's leading wine importer owned by the Mariani Family, whose purchase put to rest rumors of a pending subdivision at the time

The estate's classic 60-room mansion, now restored and called Villa Banfi, serves as the company's headquarters. It was originally named Rynwood by its first owner, Samuel Agar Salvage, who built it on the Gold Coast during the Gilded Age in 1927. The estate was later sold to Margaret Emerson, widow of Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt. Old Brookville became an incorporated village in 1929, when it had 278 residents, 29 of whom voted on the incorporation issue



Banfi vines on Hegeman's Lane, Old Brookville

The vineyard itself was planted for the first time in 1982 on what had previously been part of the neighboring Youngs Farm on Hegeman's Lane, which was founded in 1893. When the Youngs had to sell a portion of their 100-acre farm to settle an estate, they sold it to Banfi, at least partially so it would remain in agricultural use. Before grapes were planted bibb lettuce, potatoes and sweet corn were among the crops grown.

Old Brookville is the only commercial vineyard in Nassau County for a reason. Growing grapes so far west on the Island is difficult. Old Brookville doesn't share the same microclimate that makes East End vineyards so successful and these less-than-ideal conditions can lead to inconsistent harvests, even though the rich, calcareous soil is well suited to grape growing. Under the direction of enologist Frederick Frank, grandson of the Finger Lakes region winemaking legend Konstantin Frank, the first vintage was released in 1987 to critical acclaim.

Banfi Vinters 2001 Chardonnay

This year, Banfi reduced the Old Brookville Vineyard from 74 acres to 20, eliminating vines that had historically not performed well. This reduction in acreage caused a stir in the Long Island wine world, leading some to wonder if Banfi had given up on growing vines in Nassau County.

These are "vicious rumors," according to Lars Leicht, Banfi's vice president of communications. "We are still in business and growing grapes in Nassau County, even though Mother Nature did not permit us to make a vintage 2004 Chardonnay."

What did Mother Nature have in store this year? A freak hailstorm in June caused substantial damage to tender young buds and leaves and the vines just couldn't recover over the cool, wet summer. As if that weren't enough, early migration of grape-hungry birds meant that protective netting stayed in place longer, further retarding grape maturation. The result, while there was some fruit harvested, wasn't up to their usual standards, so no 2004 vintage Chardonnay was produced.

Banfi and Old Brookville Vineyards are already preparing their vines for 2005, however, and are surely hoping that Mother Nature smiles upon them next year. Banfi also produces premium wines at its Castello Banfi vineyard estate in Montalcino, Tuscany, which has been declared "International Winery of the Year" an unprecedented four times at the International Enological Concourse held in Verona, Italy.

The Old Brookville 2001 Chardonnay Gold Coast Reserve ($16), vinified at Premium Wine Group, the custom production facility in Mattituck on the North Fork, is still in stock and available throughout the New York Metropolitan area in wine shops and at Gurney's Inn Resort & Spa in Montauk.

The 2001 was a good, healthy harvest for Old Brookville, despite some May frost, with good sugar content and ideal acidity. 1,500 cases were produced.

I found the 2001 vintage to be versatile and well-balanced. On the nose, it offers pear and apple fruit and slight hints of toasty vanilla. In the mouth, this medium-bodied wine is round, fruity and nicely buttery without being overly oaked or heavy. Not terribly complex, it still features a good, lingering finish with butterscotch and vanilla. It would pair well with roasted poultry and seafood, including salmon.

wine ready to serve Friday. My personal favorite with turkey sandwiches is Zinfandel. You can get good ones (usually from California) for around $10 a bottle. Try a couple different ones to find a new favorite.

At the end of the day, the single most important thing on Thanksgiving is to have fun. If you don't like Pinot Noir or Riesling, ignore my advice completely and get something that you think you'll like. The best way to learn what you like with different foods is to just go out and try it.

No one knows your wine palate better than you, regardless of what most wine "experts" will tell you.

Holiday Host/Hostess Gifts: What Wine Should You Bring?

By Lenn Thompson

With Thanksgiving less than a week away, "the season" is almost here. No, I'm not talking about Thanksgiving Day itself or any other specific holiday. I'm talking about holiday party season. You know exactly what I'm talking about, too – because chances are you'll be invited to at least a few parties between now and the beginning of 2005. It's a great time of year and offers ample opportunities to enjoy good food and good wine with the best of friends.

Personally, I never go to a party empty handed, not because I feel obligated but because I love sharing wine with my friends Wine is a great gift, whether for a small, intimate dinner party or a large holiday open house celebration.

But what wine should you take?

Wine shops can be intimidating for anyone, with so many wines and so many options. Even if you know wine fairly well, buying wine for other people that know and love wine can be tough, too. You don't want to spend a fortune on it, but you want them to be impressed too, right?

It's okay to admit it, we all think that way sometimes.

My first suggestion is to stay local with the wines you take I know, I know. That's the kind of advice you'd expect from a Long Island wine writer, but it's sound advice. Many wine lovers, even Long Island natives, don't know much about the wonderful wines that are available on the East End. In many cases, if they've tried Long Island wine at all, it was one of the sweet, high production wines that lack the character and quality found in the best Long Island wines.

And, if you're going out of town, the chances are even greater that your hosts have never tried any Long Island wines at all!

Introduce your hosts to real Long Island wines. Any of these ten will do the job well and make you an appreciated party guest.

If you got "adopted" by another family for Thanksgiving dinner this year, here are two options that your new family will love. For dinner, take a bottle of Wolffer 2002 Pinot Noir ($60). Complex, rich and gorgeous in the glass, it's well worth the splurge for such an occasion

Another great Turkey Day option is a dessert wine like Martha Clara's 2002 Ciel ($29). Fruity, flowery and sweet (without being cloying) it's one of my favorite dessert wines, and is a good value in this often-expensive realm.

Spending the entire weekend? Take a second bottle of wine to enjoy with turkey sandwiches the next day. Pick up a couple bottles of 2002 September's Mission Merlot ($9.11) from Lieb Family Cellars. It's a nice, slurpable Merlot (with a splash of Cabernet Sauvignon) at a great price. Plus, 91 cents from each bottle goes to charity.

Every year, you probably get invited to at least one large holiday party in December. Often times the host or hostess already has wines picked out, but here are two affordable whites that go great with appetizers and party food. First, consider Macari's 2004 Early Wine ($13), which goes from grape to gulp in only a few months. It is a crisp, bright white filled with citrus and green apple. With just a tinge of sweetness, it's perfect with food.

Another great option for a big party is Paumanok's 2002 Semi-Dry Riesling ($15). This award winner offers a bit more sweetness and is well made in the style of a top-flight German Riesling.

If a co-worker or even your boss has you over for a smaller, more intimate dinner party, do your best to find out what is on the menu. If it screams for white wine, head straight for a bottle of 2003 Bedell Cellars Viognier ($29). It's a rich, elegant white that offers luscious melon and almost tropical flavors, but with excellent acidity for food friendliness.

If red wine is what's needed, two Merlots, the 2002 Comtesse Therese Traditional Merlot ($18) and the 2002 Shinn Estates young vines Merlot ($24) deliver sophisticated, complex flavors and aromas – without breaking the bank. If your hosts like Merlot, I guarantee they will love a bottle of either – or both In fact, I hope someone brings these to my next party.

When it comes to sparkling wines, I often find that there are two types of people, those that only drink the real deal from the Champagne region of France (and pay a lot for it), and those that drink cheap sugar water with bubbles and probably don't even enjoy it.

This New Year's Eve, ring in 2005 by taking a bottle of 1996 Lenz Cuvee ($30) or Lieb Family Cellars 2001 Blanc de Blanc ($35) to your best friend's house. He or she'll be pleasantly astounded that such a great sparkler is made on Long Island.

With bubbly this good around, it amazes me that we only drink it at weddings and New Year's.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

AN ART CRITIC'S NEW YORK JOURNAL

Imagine this. A beautiful fall day in Manhattan. A short ride on the crosstown bus to East End Avenue and 86th Street. Quaint rowhouses nestled on a cobblestone walkway. Across the road, green foliage just starting to turn vibrant colors. A comfortable bench to sit on while watching the squirrels hurry along the brick path. It's Carl Schurz Park, a cloistered space.

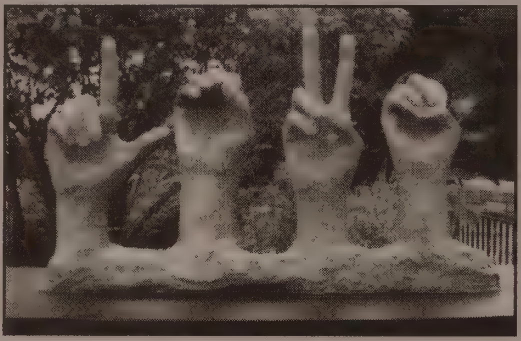
There's more. Spiral stairs lead to the upper level: a promenade overlooking the East River, steel bridges and vertical skyscrapers. Open space.

Diminutive sculptures, hands mounted on pedestals, are distributed at strategic places. A confluence of contradiction: nature as its lush, peaceful self, a haven in the urban jungle existing alongside steel, glass and a vertical vista across the river.

Dorothy Frankel's sculptured hands offer a gateway to these two opposing settings. While the fingers literally spell out words like "love" in sign language, such configurations have figurative meanings as well: "Leave your anxieties here," and "You are in good hands." (Pardon the pun.)

To be sure, Ms. Frankel's sculptures pack a potent wallop, where scale is an essential aspect: the figures' smallness vs. the surrounding's vastness. However, there's something more at work here. Call it philosophical if you will, but the hands serve a much broader purpose. They make us feel good, whole and serene.

There's another "feel good" place uptown at Fifth Avenue and 104th Street where coincidently another park appears like a mirage out of the blue: it's an English garden, complete with tall hedges, flower beds and a fountain. Across the street is El Museo del Barrio, a museum devoted primarily to Hispanic art.



"L.O.V.E." by Dorothy Frankel

El Museo has a local connection to the Hamptons, too. It's housed in a school building established by area resident and Boy's Harbor founder, Tony Duke, that offers after school programs in a variety of arts, in addition to providing the home for El Museo. At the time of this critic's visit, a video installation, "Don't Call It Performance," was featured.

The electronic recording of live performances was not only intriguing but also questioned the nature of two diverse art forms: the performance itself with people moving in space and the video presentation recalling that occurrence. Does documentation of a performance event alter the original phenomenon? We think it does. Performance art no longer exists. It exists only if we were there in person seeing it directly.

The electronic medium has its own aesthetic elements and restrictions. Video can change the way we experience an image depending on the camera's position, its exercise of stability and movement or its field of vision.

The performance pieces themselves were varied and challenging to interpret, ranging from group activities as individuals walk across the floor interacting with objects, to one-person events celebrating the body's physicality as a nude man walks along a corridor, sits down and then goes outside, disappearing into a lake.

There's food for thought here, even considering the joining of both performance and video art.

Carl Schurz Park is at East 86th Street and the Promenade. El Museo del Barrio is at 1230 Fifth Ave. at 104th Street.

HONORING THE ARTIST: PETER TASSONE

This week's cover artist, Bellport resident Peter Tassone, is a man of many interests and talents. Not only does he have a penchant for historic preservation, but he's also a builder of model trains. The cover painting, "Lords of the Manor," reflects both these fascinations: the "Manor" is the Gatsby-style Montauk resort, with locomotives recreating the neighboring Long Island Rail Road station.

When describing his work, Mr. Tassone is quick to point out that he made the trains steam locomotives, even though they're really diesel.

"Steam locomotives are magnificent machines," he notes. "They are like living organisms."

While Mr. Tassone is also a musician who has composed songs about railroads and related subjects, his conversation centers around life in upstate New York and his love of model trains.

"After getting a Masters at SUNY, New Paltz, I decided to stay in the area," Mr. Tassone explains. "Some years later, I rented an apartment in this rundown Victorian house. It was really unlivable, but I spent the whole summer fixing it up. It was a dream place when I finished. It had a wraparound porch, a working fireplace, and overlooked the Hudson River.

"The Conrail Railroad ran past it, too, which was perfect for me since I've had a longtime interest in trains, maybe since my father took me to see Penn Station in New York when I was seven. I still remember it. It was at night, and I was afraid to look up."

Although Mr. Tassone wasn't successful in buying the house after all his renovations, he was effective in obtaining a grant from the New York State Council of the Arts, creating a diorama for the Ulster and Delaware Railroad Historic Society. "I never felt more like an artist than I did when I was working on this project," Mr. Tassone recalls now with enthusiasm.

Through the years, Mr. Tassone has painted other subjects besides railroad scenes, including large landscapes of the New Paltz region. He also felt compelled to paint works featuring construction equipment, thus reinforcing the idea that the land needed preserving in addition to historic sites (like the Jamaica LIRR station in the 1870s).

While Mr. Tassone's fascination with transportation has led to other projects (for example, he has been a school bus driver, and he does detailing for automobiles), he's always been preoccupied with trains. "I'd like to go to China," he says, "where they use steam locomotives, or maybe live in New Hampshire, where the railways have been the same since the 1860s."

We have a feeling Mr. Tassone will see these dreams come true some day soon.

Alfie

A sex-sotted film about a serial womanizer may appear to be a welcome relief from the blood-soaked array of serial killers that have left a wide swath of consumed women littering the edges of movie screens but, don't be too quick to assume there is so vast a spread between the two. If you choose to believe they're miles apart, catch Jude Law's redo of the role of Alfie that Michael Caine sank his teeth into with the ferocity of a starved shark. Jude Law's handsome dog-of-a-skirt hound has all the bite of a cuddly puppy attacking your leg with his thumping, hot little body parts. Don't get me wrong – Mr. Law is so fabulously handsome attractive, his Alfie's erotic single-track mind barely needs any hip movement to announce his raison d'être. Oh, he dabbles with the thought of starting a business but, his business is the business of breaking hearts (and if, by chance, maidenheads).

Forty, or so, years after the British hit that began as a play when London swung like a pendulum, the notion was picked up by Charles Shyer, who's been used to working with his ex-wife, Nancy Meyers, on cute comedies like Father of the Bride (1 and 2) and Baby Boom, benign, high-priced neighborhood comedies, where the condom, or any birth control device, was a Bush administration no-no. Now, Mr. Shyer has been emboldened and a no-no appears bedside. And what about Ms. Meyers with nudity and then some – more some in her smash (with an assist from the Hamptons) hit Something's Gotta Give. Mr. Shyer doesn't have the Hamptons but he's close, with New York City instead of London, and now, Alfie is a limo driver with a convertible back seat. A limo needs a springy, sporting surface for an athlete like Alf? One's work should be rewarding. Jane Krakowski plays a married woman who's glad to play in the limo and that's not much of a stretch, for the others fall in line like ducks in a row. Yes, ma'am, that was ducks in a row. The downy maidens giving in to (or taking) his charms include a single mama, Marisa Tomei. Her dishrag nature has Alfie using her as just that. Then, we all know your best friend's girlfriend is a no-no. Forbidden fruit is sweeter and this appeals to Alfie. Sexily acted by Nia Long, the best friend's one passion entwines with the Don Juan chauffeur in a lonely late night bar. It is a scene that generates some of the original film's prickly heat. Let's see, who else? Well, sure, there's Susan Sarandon as a Trumpette tycoon of cosmetics. She exudes more testosterone than Alf. Checking the hit list, we can't forget Sienna Miller's gorgeous looks and vacuous mind. Alfie almost settles for her. Heck no – she's another discard. Mr. Shyer's script also bounces the actresses' roles. Like Alfie it's wham-bam thank you, ma'am.

So, what's it all about, Alfie? Why remake a movie that was very much of its own time? 1966 rocked in the wake of Playboy's titillating sexuality. Older women were still handicapped while young men had been given a license to hunt, catch and distribute the meat. Many men, like Michael Caine's Alfie, used their contemptuous disdain for women to inflict pain, if necessary, mental or otherwise. These guys weren't called ladykillers for no reason. Today's Alfie skirts cosily around the skirt-lifting mindset of women as cool (or, hot) gadgets to play with. It also doesn't even sniff at the 1966 socially conscientious take on abortion, another White House no-no. This year's Alfie is next year's legislation.

Did ya know Cher sang the original title song?

THE DAN'S PAPERS THEY MADE THE MOVIE HERE FILM FESTIVAL

SNAPPED

Saturday, November 20th at 2 p.m. Dan's Papers' "Movies Made Here" Free Film Festival continues at the Ross School Lecture Hall. It is fitting to present an as yet not-widely-distributed film by a young writer/director, Jesse Feigelman, that was shot entirely in East Hampton. Feigelman passed away at age 31, but we hope to have his parents present to discuss the making of the film. At the time of his death, Feigelman had been preparing another film titled HOTBOX. Discussion of moviemaking here on the East End will be of great local interest and, I, your host, Guy de Fraumeni will fill in some blanks. With me will be Sarah Halsey, at the Ross School mammoth console, pressing the buttons that give us ultra moderne picture and sound. She also tweaks the hearty refreshments. We are at 9 Goodfriend Drive off of Route 114. Be informed – the film is Rated: Youth. It contains strong language and some nighttime skinny dipping. (Those youths are skinny, aren't they?)

SNAPPED, the first and only feature length film by Feigelman who made award-winning shorts while studying at SUNY Purchase, has, as his legacy, a story of East Hampton kids growing up a little bent out of shape. The most dented is Billy, played with an overdose of moxie by Johnny Zander. This wily young guy is first seen grabbing a L.I.R.R. train east. Then, mid-Island he's working in a diner. Seated at the counter is a crusty white mustached tough. This is the venerable actor Seymour Cassell (Coincidentally, just days ago, Ben Gazzara spoke of Cassell dating back to the golden Actor's Studio days). A customer departs, leaving his payment on the counter. Billy, little devil that he is, slips out from the griddle, takes the money and runs. Cassell puts two and two together – runs out. Billy's gone – he's on another train. He opens a satchel and there's a bundle of money. He adds the new little bit to it. Cassell's in his old car, after him.

Snapped

We cut to a peaceful road. Tara (Gaby Hoffman) is on her bike. She stops when she sees a dog killed on the road. She photographs it and lies next to it, her cheek on the pavement. Cut to Reed's Photo Shop on Newtown Lane in East Hampton. A handsome young guy, Shane (David Wheir) is one-hour processing the dog photos. The next batch of photos are sexual-erotic. A fellow naked except for a dead bird covering his privates. There's a handsome brunette with a long squash. We must all remember – photos are developed by other humans, not just fast turning machines.

The movie SNAPPED tells its story with that in mind. It's own story of Billy, Tara and Shane unfolds like packets of processed photos. Tara's weird kinda Voodoo ways, Billy's Wild West pistol packing way of having fun with Shane who gets his kicks taking in what his friends Billy and Tara are doing. There's Tara's collecting weird stuff and floating it out into the bay – afire. Billy holds up Plain and Fancy, where Tara is working. He came to take her home, for heaven's sake. Billy leads Shane into housebreaking. Billy and Tara speed home firing off his pistol. Whoa, there's the midnight dip. And, all the while, there's the white mustached man chugging his smoking old overheated car – on the heels of Billy.

The one hour photos will record the fun, the sadness and, eventual tragedy? What if you ran into the woman with the squash at the produce section of the IGA? What if – you can see it all. We'll show you it all.

HAPPY THANKSGIVING

Mommy, Where Do Cranberries Come From?

Before you set the table, polish those silver berry spoons, and dust off the serving dishes, here are a few morsels of Thanksgiving trivia that may be of use to you on that festive day.

Despite popular misconceptions, cranberries do not grow in water. Instead, they grow on vines in low lying areas beginning in the late summer and continue throughout the fall. During this time the bogs begin to flood with water from autumn rainfall, giving the cranberries the appearance of growing in water.

An indigenous plant to the Northeast, they had been used by Native Americans for centuries as a source of food and medicine. The colonists quickly took notice of this tart little fruit and began to implement it into their own diets during the autumn months. In 1870 the first manmade cranberry bog was planted in Calverton. The years that followed saw the growth of the industry on Long Island's East End, with bogs sprouting up throughout the Pine Barren region in the remnants of iron bogs that dated back to the Revolutionary War. In the early 1900s, Long Island's cranberry industry was strong, but as the years progressed, like much of the agriculture on the East End, it began to dwindle until 1976, when the last cranberry farm, Manorville's Davis Bog, harvested their final crop. Although cranberries are no longer harvested here, it is not to say they do not exist. The 36-acre Amagansett National Wildlife Refuge still has cranberry bogs growing in it. It is illegal to pick the cranberries that grow on the property, but it is still impressive to see these tangy berries floating in a natural state.

Oddly enough, another plant that is found on Long Island is the Marsh Mallow plant. No, those fluffy white treats do not grow on trees and actually no longer have anything to do with the Marsh Mallow plant, except share its name.

A longtime favorite with candied sweet potatoes, marshmallows, in one form or another, have existed for ages. The ancient Egyptians mixed honey and the sap from the Marsh Mallow plant to form the first version of this sugary treat. Centuries later Marsh Mallow juice came to be considered an elixir for boosting the immune system. In order to have children ingest it, the sap was mixed with egg whites and sugar, then whipped and served as a hardened meringue.

The beneficial properties of the marshmallow were soon to be done away with completely as advancements in the scientific world led to the substitution of gelatin in place of the harder-to-come by Marsh Mallow sap, but it wasn't until 1948 that marshmallows took their present shape. Tired of the slow process of forming the gooey treats by hand, Alex Doumak set forth on a journey that would revolutionize marshmallows for the second time. The introduction of gelatin led to a more stable marshmallow, which opened the doors for the "extrusion process," a manufacturing procedure that piped marshmallow through tubes and then cut them into equal size pieces – thus the modern day marshmallow was born.

If dispelling the myth that cranberries grow in water and marshmallows grow on trees wasn't enough, there is one more Thanksgiving myth that needs examining … The Yam. Everyone loves candied yams on Thanksgiving, right? Wrong. If you were actually fed yam on Thanksgiving you would be absolutely shocked. Yams are really a tuber indigenous to Africa and are only rarely sold here. Unlike the sweet potato grown in the United States, the yam is dry, starchy and has little sweetness at all. It's not even related to the sweet potato. The confusion between the two stems from a marketing strategy by American sweet potato producers that has essentially bewildered an entire nation. In an attempt to distinguish the deep orange, sweeter variety of sweet potatoes from the more yellow, mealy type, the orange variety was given the name "yam," derived from the name of the African tuber, "nyami." Although these two plants have no connection whatsoever, the word yam and sweet potato have become synonymous in the U.S. and are sold under both titles. On a similar note, the sweet potato isn't related to the regular potato either.

Regardless of their origins, manufacturing process or namesake, the cranberry, marshmallow and "yam" have become staples of the Thanksgiving feast. The story behind them is almost as interesting as the tale of Thanksgiving itself. So whether you prefer canned or farmstand fresh, enjoy the holiday and make sure you know what you're eating.

Happy Thanksgiving

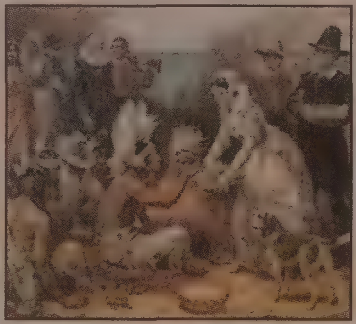
The History of Thanksgiving

In1621, Plymouth colonists and the Wampanoag Indians enjoyed a "Pilgrim's Harvest Feast," now known as Thanksgiving. The Pilgrims had sailed to this land aboard the Mayflower seeking a better life. They fled their homeland, England, to escape religious persecution. Looking back to this mixture of cultures and religious beliefs reminds us of the rich history and glorious holiday traditions that are America.

Whether we share similar views or simply flavorful foods, the sentiment and nostalgia associated with sharing a meal together warms the heart and soul. Thanksgiving makes us stop and think about all the things we should be grateful for, and it's a time for understanding and giving to those who can't do for themselves. The first Thanksgiving was in fact considered more of a religious holiday. Today, many churches, local charities and kindhearted individuals take this day to donate their time and goodwill to feed the homeless and those that are struggling to make ends meet.

In addition to charitable contributions, there are also many celebrations and festivities to enjoy. Football, board games, family walks and classic movies are part of today's enjoyment, while in the past activities included dancing, singing and playing games.

The actual date of the first Thanksgiving happened sometime between the last week of September and the second week of November. However, in 1939, President Franklin D. Roosevelt declared it the fourth Thursday of November and that was approved by Congress as the official celebration of this holiday. Prior to that date, Abraham Lincoln selected November 21st in recognition of the Mayflower landing.



Actually, the Mayflower landed at Plymouth Rock on December 11, 1620 in the frigid cold winter weather, eventually leading to the demise of almost half of the 102 people who set sail on the journey. But, by the following year, they had adjusted to their new living conditions and learned to harvest food. This first harvest feast lasted three days, but there were definitely some differences.

Can you imagine not using forks to eat turkey, goose or duck? Our forefathers used spoons and knives and their fingers to dig in. The foods that were prepared at this first harvest would not meet the standards of today's low-fat healthy recipes, but back then people needed more protein and they weren't so concerned with high cholesterol. In the 1600s, the major health concern was the plague.

The Pilgrims did experiment with spices when they cooked, using nutmeg, ginger, cinnamon and dried fruit, and also salt and pepper. For the most part, all the meats were roasted with the exception of the meats prepared by the Wampanoag Indians. The Indians dried hams, fish and herbs regularly because there was no form of refrigeration.

In the 1600s, everything was put on the table at the same time and there were no separate courses. They served cod, clams, lobster and eel in addition to the turkey, goose, venison and seal. (Seal?) Okay, now I'm officially upset and disturbed. We have certainly come a long way, and I'm glad that the eating of seals has been banished completely.

Today we enjoy starting the meal with appetizers and cocktails, our tables are adorned with beautiful linens and place settings and the dishes are sometimes not so traditional. Thanks to people like Martha Stewart, we have limitless great ideas for decorating and creating elegant table settings and tasty dishes.

Still the same is the fact that America continues to be the "melting pot" and the "pillow" on which many people from other countries choose to build a new life. Everyone should enjoy this festive celebration that combines, food, faith, family and freedom.

HAPPY THANKSGIVING

Apples, Apples, Apples

By Silvia Lehrer

Smitten by apples? Run, don't walk, to your favorite apple orchard or farmers' markets to pick out fall favorites. While local apple picking time may have passed, the variety of apples for both eating and baking are still in peak season. There is nothing like the bitingly sweet/tart flavor and texture of local apples. A basketful of colorful apples on a hall table or dining room sideboard is an appealing and timely decoration.

There's always someone in the family with a sweet tooth. To ward off any dry and sugary baked goods brought into the house, I try to have a home made treat with staying qualities. Here are two apple desserts that are quick and simple to prepare, and a salsa that fits the bill.

With the holiday season and cooler weather ahead, perhaps even non-bakers will be inspired to turn on the oven. The familiar baked apple can be distinguished by its praline nut topping for a trendy caramel-like flavor. The apple walnut pudding cake is simply a tumble of ingredients thrown into a Pyrex pan and baked. No need for the oven when preparing an apple salsa with the spice of red onion, jalapeño, currants and cumin. It would, however, make a deliciously piquant accompaniment for your Thanksgiving turkey.

APPLE SALSA

Prepare the salsa up to one day ahead for flavors to mellow, then serve with a roast of your choice. Yield: 2 1/2 cups

2 Granny Smiths, Gala or Pippin apples
1/2 cup chopped red onion
1 small jalapeño, trimmed and seeded
1/3 cup dried currants
1/2 cup fresh orange juice
Grated zest of 1 orange
1 teaspoon ground cumin
1 tablespoon chopped cilantro

1. Rinse apples and pat dry. Core apples and cut into 1/4-inch dice. Peel and cut onion into 1/4-inch dice. Mince jalapeño and combine in a bowl with apples and onion.

2. Place currants in a small bowl with orange juice to plump, about 15-20 minutes. Add to the apple mixture with remaining ingredients and stir to mix. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary. Prepare up to one or two days ahead. Refrigerate, covered in a suitable container until ready to serve.

PRALINE BAKED APPLES

Everybody loves baked apples – prepare them ahead and they are ready when you are!
Serves 4-6

4-6 Red Rome or Golden Delicious apples
1-1 1/2 cups fresh apple cider
1/8-1/4 teaspoon cinnamon
1/4-1/3 cup dark brown sugar plus extra to caramelize
1/4-1/3 cup coarsely chopped pecans or walnuts
1-2 tablespoons unsalted butter, diced
Vanilla or butter pecan ice cream

Preheat oven to 350 degrees

1. Wash apples and remove core to 1/2 inch of bottom. Cut a strip of peel from open end of apples. Place apples side by side in a Pyrex baking or casserole dish. Pour over apple cider and spoon a layer of cinnamon and brown sugar over the top. Spoon nuts evenly into each core and dot tops with butter.

2. Cover dish and bake in preheated oven for 35-40 minutes or until apples are tender, basting occasionally with pan juices. Just before serving, sprinkle over a little more brown sugar, if desired, and run the apples under the broiler to caramelize and serve warm with a dollop of ice cream.

APPLE WALNUT PUDDING

The pudding-like texture of this simple-to-make fruity cake will have you preparing it over and over again.
Serves 6-8

2 apples, Cortlands, Rome Beauty or Greening
2 eggs
1/2 cup sugar
1/2 cup regular or skim milk
1/2 cup flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
1/4 teaspoon cinnamon
1/4 teaspoon allspice
1/8 teaspoon nutmeg
1/2 cup coarsely chopped walnut meats
Confectioners' sugar (optional)

Preheat oven to 350 degrees

Heavily butter the bottom and sides of an 8-inch square Pyrex baking dish.

1. Peel, core and cube the apples; set aside.

2. Place eggs in a mixing bowl and beat until fluffy. Gradually beat in sugar and milk.

3. Sift together flour, salt, baking powder and spices through a sieve on a large square of waxed paper. Add to the egg mixture and stir to mix until well incorporated.

4. Fold apples into the egg flour mixture along with the walnuts until thoroughly incorporated and transfer to the prepared pan. With a spatula, spread the apples to distribute them evenly and bake for 35-40 minutes. Dust with confectioners' sugar if desired. Serve warm directly from the pan or at room temperature.

HAPPY THANKSGIVING

Giving Thanks By Giving Back

Thanksgiving is a time of bounty, and a time to express our gratitude for all that we have. But even in this community, where the local produce is abundant, there are people in need. So Thanksgiving can often be a difficult reminder of what some of don't have. When we are fortunate enough to have so much to be grateful for, a truly great way to give thanks is to give back. And what better place to start than our own community?

With all the chaos in the world today, it is often difficult to decide where to focus your charitable energy. There are so many places that could use our help. Iraq is seeing devastation and death every day. Sudan is experiencing genocide. But here, we are rich with the fruits of our own land. Harvest season offers us the best corn, pumpkins, and squashes, straight from our fields onto our tables. Still, just because we drive down the road and see peace all around us doesn't mean there isn't need. So maybe the small part that we can play in making the world better should happen on our own land.

The Human Resources of the Hamptons (HRH), which is based in Southampton, is a group that provides year-round support for families in need. It is the largest food pantry on the East End, and works to supply our neighbors with basics like clothing, medical transportation, back-to-school supplies, infant formula, and emergency assistance. At this time of year, as the holiday spirit begins to take hold, HRH is going to be busy as ever. Their 26th annual Holiday Food and Gift Basket Project kicks off on November 19, and they plan to spread the joy and bounty of the season with holiday gifts for more than 2000 children and full turkey feasts for more than 300 local families.

Donations of canned goods will be accepted at HRH headquarters at 168 Hill Street. You can also make donations for the holiday season by visiting one of the "giving trees," which will be set up around the town of Southampton beginning November 19. You are invited to take a star from the giving tree. On the back of the star, there will be written the name of a toy or piece of clothing and donors are asked to purchase this item and then deliver it, unwrapped, to the HRH headquarters. There will be a giving tree at Sacred Hearts Church, the Southampton branch of the North Fork Bank, St. John's Episcopal Church, and the Sag Harbor Presbyterian Church.

During the week of December 12, hundreds of volunteers will meet for wrapping parties at HRH headquarters. They will sort, wrap, and label all the gifts received from the giving trees. The wrapping parties will take place on Sunday, December 12 from 2 to 4 p.m., and Thursday, December 16 from 10 a.m. to noon. All are welcome and encouraged to attend. The Southampton Kiwanis and Rotary clubs have volunteered to donate food boxes.

This year there will be a major fundraising event to help support the Holiday drive. Are you ready for a real shock? Well, you are invited to experience the rush for a great cause. The Polar Bear Plunge for Hunger will take place December 18 at 10 a.m. at Cooper's Beach in Southampton. Almost 100 volunteers have already signed up to jump into the icy water to help raise money for HRH. After the daredevils take the plunge, there will be an after-party for survivors with hot refreshments. For more information or to volunteer, send an email to polarbear@greenshoe.com.

Thanksgiving kicks off the holiday season straight through the New Year. It's a time to acknowledge and appreciate all that you have, to count your blessings, and to spread the joy of the season. If you want to give back to this beautiful community, please contact Mary Ann Tupper at Human Resources of the Hamptons at 283-6415 or check out the website at www.hrhamptons.org.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Thanksgiving for me evokes an image of family and a table laden with foods that are an homage to autumn's vibrant flavors and colors. The variegated oranges, reds and greens of all manner of squash and root vegetables, the vivid red of assorted cranberry relishes, the rich deep hues of the caramelized bird and the blush of fruit pies are enticing.

Preparing all the dishes for the holiday is no easy feat and, more often than not, it is a shared experience. An acceptable practice indeed! If Aunt Suzy and Cousin Jane would like to participate, by all means, accept graciously. Strategy for the meal should be planned ahead. Ideally, the hosts prepare the big bird, or any main dish for the feast, and perhaps the soup, not an easily transportable item. But certainly side dishes such as potato purees and vegetable roasts in their own heat-proof serving dishes are great contributions that can be reheated while the bird is resting before carving. All manner of desserts are a welcome gift and can add to the crisp or pie or the roasted pear dessert you just simply had to make, especially if you're expecting a crowd. The table is set the day before with all the accoutrements – and for many that is the fun part. Greet your guests with just a bowl of spiced nuts to nibble on. Remember, the holiday table will be abundant.

Kabocha squash, delicately mealy with sweet flesh, is currently voguish and a way to celebrate the local harvest. Bake and season with butter or steam and puree into a soup with leek and ginger. Broccoli mushroom loaf is a succulent pate-like preparation that can be completely prepared up to two days ahead and reheated for your holiday dinner. And roasted pears with caramel make a sweet, light contrast to the array of pies so typical at Thanksgiving. Then, gather the clan and take a brisk walk! Have a happy and safe Thanksgiving.

KABOCHA AND LEEK SOUP WITH GINGER

Kabocha is a somewhat squat but sweet variety of squash with a button like knob at the top. It can be steamed and the flesh pureed to a velvety finish.

Serves 8-10

1 kabocha or Butternut squash, about 3 pounds

1 tablespoon canola or vegetable oil
1 1/2 tablespoons unsalted butter
3-4 scallions, trimmed and thinly sliced
2 leek, trimmed and washed, white and light part only
1 tablespoon grated fresh ginger
1/2 cup dry white wine
5 cups chicken broth, preferably homemade
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
1/2 cup light or heavy cream
1-2 tablespoons chopped fresh sage for garnish

1. Poke the squash all over with a sharp paring knife then microwave on high for 6 minutes to make it easier to cut through the hard flesh. With a large chef's knife, halve the kabocha squash crosswise and scoop out the seeds and fiber. Place cut-side down on a rack in a covered sauce pan and steam over simmering water over medium-low heat about 20 minutes. Alternately, if using Butternut squash, slice the long neck crosswise and steam as above until flesh is soft enough to scoop from the shell.

2. In a large saucepan, melt butter and oil. When butter foam subsides, add scallions and leeks and saute for a few minutes. Add the ginger and stir to mix. Cover saucepan and simmer for 7-8 minutes to sweat the vegetables, stirring occasionally. Add wine, bring to a boil and reduce liquid by half. Put in the squash pieces and the stock and stir to mix. Bring to the edge of a boil. Season the soup to taste with salt and freshly ground pepper, adjust heat and let simmer for 30 – 35 minutes.

3. Allow soup to cool slightly then puree with hand held immersion blender directly in the saucepan or transfer to a blender or food processor and puree until smooth. Can be made ahead to this point. Refrigerate in a suitable container for a day or two or freeze.

4. When ready to serve the soup, stir in the cream and gently reheat. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary. Serve garnished with chopped sage or parsley.

BROCCOLI MUSHROOM LOAF

This Thanksgiving family favorite can be completely prepared up to two days ahead. Reheat in water bath before serving.

Serves 10-12

4-5 shallots, finely chopped
2 bunches broccoli (3-3 1/2 pounds)
1/2 pound shiitake mushrooms, trimmed
1/4 pound white mushrooms, trimmed
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons finely chopped flat-leaf Italian parsley
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
2 eggs plus 2 egg whites
1/2 cup heavy cream
1/2 cup plain bread crumbs
1/4 teaspoon freshly ground nutmeg
Reserve 7-8 broccoli florets for garnish (optional)

1. Place shallots in workbowl of food processor fitted with steel knife and chop finely or hand chop. Set aside.

2. Trim broccoli of heavy stems and leaves and cut flowerets into "little trees." Rinse clean then cook in boiling salted water to cover for 3-4 min-

Dining in the Hamptons

Il Capuccino Ristorante

30 Madison Street, Sag Harbor
631-725-2747

The warm, cozy atmosphere of Il Cappuccino in Sag Harbor gives you the feeling that you're a guest at a real, traditional Italian dinner. The only difference is that Jim Renner, the charming chef, bears no resemblance to the round, little Italian grandmother stirring the sauce. Otherwise, the red-checkered tablecloths, ceramic bowls of freshly grated Romano cheese, the Chianti wine jugs hanging from the red tin ceiling, and the paintings, all done by Achille (Jack) Tagliasacchi, owner of Il Capuccino, contribute to the authentic Italian ambience of the restaurant. Il Capuccino definitely emanates the family vibe, with much of the waitstaff either relatives or longtime friends.

It was crowded for a Monday night in November, the waitresses running from table to table, refilling water and wine, checking that all the customers were happy. But one got the feeling that most of the people there were regulars, back for their favorite dishes. My friends Robin and Maura sat with me at a table in the quiet back room, and we each ordered a glass of wine from the substantial wine list. One is afforded the option of ordering by the bottle, by the glass, or by the carafe. We each wanted a different variety, so we ordered by the glass. I enjoyed the La Monica Montepulciano, Robin had a glass of the Ruffino Pinot Grigio, and Maura selected the Spalletti Chianti.

And then came the garlic knots. For those of you who have never been to Il Capuccino, the fresh baked garlic knots may well be enough of a reason to make the trip. They are prepared in soybean oil, baked fresh daily, and emerge piping hot from the kitchen, drizzled with the sweet oil and flavorful garlic, then sprinkled with parsley. It was all I could do to limit myself to two, because I knew I had a big meal ahead.

As we perused the menu, the chef, fondly known as Jimbo, sent out a sample of the Tortellini al Pistachio, which is unlike anything I've ever tasted. It's a homemade cheese tortellini with roasted pistachios in a creamy parmesan sauce. The crunch of the pistachios provides an interesting contrast with the soft pillow of tortellini in a creamy blanket of sauce.

I couldn't decide between all the classic Italian specialties, from the Fresh Mozzarella with Tomatoes, served with pignoli nuts over pesto, to the Baked Lasagna Napoletana with ricotta, sliced meatballs and sausage, tomato sauce, and mozzarella. Or what about the Arugula, Endive, and Radicchio Salad topped with goat cheese, or the Fresh Salmon Cappuccino, pan seared in a brandy and peppercorn cream sauce? All of the dishes were classic favorites with a subtle twist. When we finally made our decisions, we didn't look back.

Out came the stuffed clams, which were absolute monsters. Usually, I expect a bunch of smaller shells, but these three giant clams on the half shell, filled with a fabulous blend of stuffing and clams, were delicious, particularly when they were accented with the lemon that accompanied them. Our last appetizer greeted our filling stomachs. It was a special that night, the Asian Pear salad with radicchio and goat cheese. The cool greens and juicy pear cleansed the palate from the previous rich appetizers, and our appetites were warmed up, expectantly awaiting the entrees.

Robin had the Flounder Al Limone, and the fresh filets are prepared in a light egg and flour coat, then sautéed in butter, lemon and herbs. On the side she got a special treat instead of the usual fare of a pasta of her choice. She welcomed a small portion of the Capelli D'Angelo ai Gamberi, which is one of the restaurant's Pasta Specialties. And special it was: the shrimp was sautéed in garlic and olive oil with scallions, tomatoes, and a touch of marinara. This lovely light sauce is served over a bed of angel hair pasta. Robin was enamored.

I didn't have even a hint of jealousy, though, because my entrée was spectacular. It also came from the specials. It was a Rigatoni Primavera, served with juicy shrimp in a light vodka sauce. The vegetables in the sauce, yellow squash, thinly sliced carrots, and spears of zucchini, complimented the shrimp without being overpowering.

We were so absolutely stuffed that we couldn't bear the thought of dessert, no matter how delicious, but Jimbo wouldn't let us leave without a taste of the tiramisu. Its light, creamy texture and delicately sweet flavor capped off a delicious evening at Capp's.

A Norwegian Dinner Party

Norway is a country blessed with splendid landscapes and climatic contrasts, providing a rich source of ingredients from which Norwegian culinary traditions have evolved. Friendly in temperament, gracious to foreigners, and stoic in their acceptance of the weather, Norwegians strive to make visitors aware of the best aspects of Norway and Norwegian life – especially in regard to their cuisine. The Norwegians, like most peoples, have their special foods and traditions, and there is no better way to learn about these than to attend a Norwegian dinner party.

Having guests to dinner is an important part of entertaining in Norway and tends to be a more formal affair than in the U.S. It is customary to bring a small gift, usually flowers, the first time you visit someone's home. Gifts of liquor, wine, or chocolate are also perfectly acceptable.

Punctuality is important to the Norwegians. If the dinner invitation is set for 7 p.m., you should arrive at 7 p.m. and not earlier or later. You are also expected to introduce yourself to those guests already present and not wait to be introduced by your host. Once seated at the table, you must wait until the host has formally welcomed everyone to his home and offered the first Skål (toast) before you take a drink.

Dinner parties are generally long, with three courses and much conversation, and it is regarded as impolite to leave immediately after dinner. It is, however, polite to finish everything on your plate. Norwegians do not like to waste food, but there is also no need to overindulge.

The person sitting to the left of the hostess is usually the guest of honor. That person is expected to give a Skål and thanks for the food (takk for maten) at the end of the meal to thank the host and hostess. The speech/toast usually includes flattering references to the food, decor, and company, a joke, and then the Skål. It is customary to wait until at least an hour after dinner has been finished before retiring to the living room, where coffee and cakes are usually served. Alcohol is served at many parties (but there are always non-alcoholic beverages served for designated drivers) so it is best to plan on taking a taxi or having a designated driver. The drunk-driving laws in Norway are extremely strict, and most Norwegians who are driving will not even take a sip of alcohol during a party.

Now let us turn to the cuisine itself. What kind of foods can you expect to be awaiting you at the table? Well, the Norwegian dinner is usually quite plain and simple, and in most meals you will find boiled potatoes! A very popular dinner is "kjùttkaker" (meatballs) and gravy. Americans are used to meatballs being labeled Swedish, but this dish is as common in Norway as in Sweden. "Lapskaus" is another traditional meal: a mix of meat and vegetables cooked for a long time so that all is nice and tender, with thin, dry bread (flatbrød) at the side. Fish, such as fresh trout and salmon, are popular dinner entrees and are prepared in a variety of ways, though they are commonly served poached as steaks. A number of national dishes such as fermented fish (rakfisk), sour milk cheese (gammelost), and salted lamb ribs (pinnekjøtt) are also popular.

What beverages await you? Up until the last century, 90% of the Norwegian population lived in rural areas, where the everyday beverage was "blande," a mixture of water and sour whey. Those who could afford it drank home-brewed beer before the advent of coffee, which is a very popular Norwegian drink today. Because it is difficult to cultivate wine grapes in Norway, wine must be imported. Norway produces a type of spirit called aquavit (akevitt). Distilled from potatoes, it is usually flavored with caraway. Aquavit and beer are the traditional accompaniments to lutefisk, mutton, and cabbage and many salted and smoked dishes that may appear on your dinner table.

If you happen to be attending a dinner party during Christmas ("Juletide"), you can expect to find layer cakes (bløtkaker) filled and frosted with whipped cream and jam, and almond macaroon rings piled high in pyramids to make the traditional tower cake called "kranseka." Most families tend to stick to special Christmas dinner traditions. Along the coast, the main dish at home on Christmas Eve is often fresh cod, halibut, or lutefisk, while in eastern Norway many prefer pork ribs with pork sausage patties and Christmas sausages. Dried mutton ribs are a west coast specialty. A popular meal earlier in the day, while the other preparations are in full swing, is rice porridge, and many families have rice cream with red fruit sauce for their Christmas dinner dessert.

utes until tender. Drain, refresh under cool, running water and dry on a clean kitchen towel. Reserve 7-8 florets for garnish and set aside.

3. Puree broccoli in a food processor fitted with steel knife or in batches in a blender. Add eggs and egg whites and pulse machine to process or blend to mix. Add cream, salt and pepper, nutmeg and breadcrumbs and pulse or blend to mix. Transfer mixture to a bowl and set aside.

4. Rinse mushrooms quickly in a colander, wipe clean with a damp paper towel and slice thin.

5. Melt butter in a skillet and when foam subsides, put in the mushrooms then add shallots and toss to coat. Saute mixture, stirring occasionally over medium heat for 2-3 minutes until tender. Stir in parsley and season with salt and pepper to taste. Cool and chop mushrooms coarsely then stir into the broccoli puree.

Preheat oven to 375 degrees.

6. Transfer mixture to a well-buttered loaf pan, and dust with bread crumbs. Cover top of loaf with a strip of lightly buttered wax paper. Set mold in pan containing enough hot water to reach 2/3 up the sides. Place in preheated oven and bake 45-50 minutes or until a knife inserted in center comes out clean. Allow to stand 10 minutes before unmolding. Garnish with florets, if desired.

ROAST CARAMELIZED PEARS

Pears develop a concentrated, complex flavor when roasted. Warm the resulting sauce to maximize its comforting flavor.

Serves 6-8

Juice of 1 lemon
6-8 Bosc pears, peeled, halved lengthwise and cored
1/2 cup sugar
3-4 whole cloves
1 1/2 cups water
1/2 cup heavy cream
Toasted slivered almonds and fresh berry garnish, optional

Preheat oven to 400 degrees.

1. Fill a large bowl with water and 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Place pears in lemon water for 10-12 minutes then drain, and pat dry with paper towels. Arrange the pears cut side down in a buttered gratin dish.

2. Meanwhile, combine sugar, remaining lemon juice and water in a saucepan. Cook, without stirring, over medium heat until mixture is an amber color. Cautiously add the cream; the sauce will spatter a bit, so stand back, and stir into the caramel. Stir to mix to a smooth, creamy caramel.

3. Pour the caramel over the pears, spooning over the sauce to coat. Transfer gratin to preheated oven and roast about 50 minutes, basting the pears occasionally with the caramel, until they are tender and golden brown. The dish can be prepared up to one day ahead and reheated slowly in a low oven or serve at room temperature.

4. Garnish with almonds and fresh berries before serving, if desired.

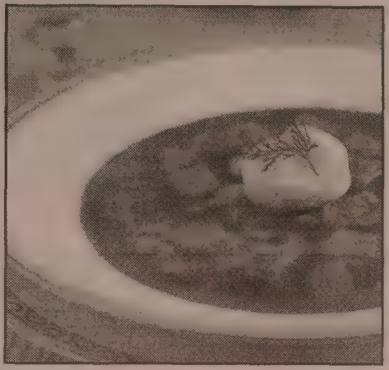
Russia: More Than Caviar

Many people associate Russia with caviar. And, indeed, wealthy Russians do eat lots of caviar and pair it with premium vodka. But there is much more to Russian food than caviar. Russia's long, cold winters require heavy food, so if you want to plan a Russian-inspired meal, you will probably want to wait until the dark, cold days of January (unless of course you are taking the caviar route, in which case you will not want to wait another moment). January 12 would be a perfect day for your Russian dinner, as that is one of the two New Year's Eves celebrated in Russia (the other being December 31). Russians bring in the New Year this second time because, until 100 years ago, Russians used the old Julian calendar, which places the New Year on our January 13, and Russians are always happy to have a reason to celebrate. So, don't start that New Year's resolution to lose your holiday weight for two extra weeks, and think meat and potatoes.

One reason Russians eat so much meat and potatoes is that, during the Russian winter, it is difficult to find ripe, fresh vegetables. However, Russians do pickle vegetables, such as cucumbers, cabbage, mushrooms and tomatoes, and often serve them, individually or in combinations, for hors d'oeuvres or appetizers (but usually not as an accompaniment to a main course). Russians are particularly fond of eating spicy and salty pickled cucumbers with vodka. Another popular appetizer is a dressed herring salad (Selyodka pod Shouboy), which also has potatoes, beets and carrots, mixed with either mayonnaise or oil.

Soups are always popular in cold countries, and Russia is no exception. Their most famous soup is borscht, which is sometimes thought of as a beet soup but in fact has many other ingredients, including tomatoes, potatoes, carrot, onion, cabbage, and dill. Borscht sometimes has meat, as well, particularly if served as the main course, and is often served with sour cream. If you do not like beets, Russians eat many other soups, including mushroom soup (grybnoy), chicken soup (kuryniy), and a white fish soup with carrot, spices and potatoes (uha).



The main course is all about meat. Russians eat steaks, pork chops, sausages, and chicken. Popular dishes include Beef Stroganov (tenderloin cubes in a thick, spicy, creamy sauce) and Chicken Kiev (which oozes melted butter). Dumpling-like pastries filled with minced meat (called Pelmeny) or berries or potatoes (called Vareniky) are also major staples. Many meats are cooked with mushrooms and potatoes. If the meal does not already have potatoes in it, fried, baked or boiled potatoes are likely to be served on the side, with sour cream, ketchup, mustard or a horseradish sauce. Alternatively, a rice- or semolina-based porridge (kasha) might be served as a side dish. A popular vegetarian main course is a creamy mushroom dish.

For dessert, many Russians enjoy bliny, a crepe served with sour cream, honey or jam. Honey and jam are also added to cottage cheese (Tvorog) and pastries (pirozhky). Fruit cakes made with raisins, dried apricots and various candied fruits are common, as is something similar to our pumpkin pie.

All of this food is usually served with vodka or a sweet, bread-based alcoholic drink called Kvas, which is often homemade. For non-alcoholic beverages, Russians often enjoy a sweetened fruit drink called Kompot made by boiling fruit and sugar in water and then chilling the mixture, or a hot honey/spice drink called Sbitten. But alcoholic beverages are a very important part of any Russian celebration.

Each round of drinks is always accompanied by a toast, after which glasses are clinked and the entire contents of each glass must be finished. It is considered rude to drink less than everyone else, and if someone does not finish one's glass, that means he or she did not support the toast. (A Russian woman recently told me that eye contact must be made at the time of the clink, or you will have seven years of bad sex; she may have been kidding, but I do not intend to find out the hard way.) Because people drink so much at a social gathering, it is common for everyone to sleep over, using beds, sofas and even the floor. Sometimes the party continues on during the next morning – or, at the very least, people partake of their usual hangover cure, having a bit more to drink, called opokhmelitsya (which may or may not translate to "hair of the dog that bit you"). Interestingly, Russians respect people with high tolerances to alcohol, who don't get sloppy or fall down. And they insist that Russians are not alcoholics, just heavy drinkers.

I think I may be Russian.

Away At School. . . By David Lion Rattiner

John's Job

My best friend from high school, John Schirippa, is getting up very, very early to go to work these days. John graduated from Mary Washington College last spring and spent the summer in East Hampton working as a waiter at East Hampton Point. It was a scary time for him because when the fall came around, he hadn't found a regular job yet. I was constantly getting frantic phone calls from him about this subject.

"Dave, I don't know what to do now. I have been applying for jobs online but nobody is calling me back."

"John, don't you have a girlfriend back in Virginia?"

"Yeah."

"So why not move to Virginia and then try to find a job there?"

"Okay."

About a month later I had heard news through the grapevine that John was moving. I was nervous because I was pretty sure that he was making a life changing decision based on the phone conversation he and I had. In my mind, the worst possible thing that could happen would be if he were to go down there, break up with his girlfriend, not find a job, go broke, then have to move back to East Hampton to return to living with his parents. Well, maybe he would find work as spy, learn some Arabic and do some things that are classified.

Well, I found he did get a job, and though he is not exactly a secret agent, he works in the same building that secret agents work in. Here is the phone conversation.

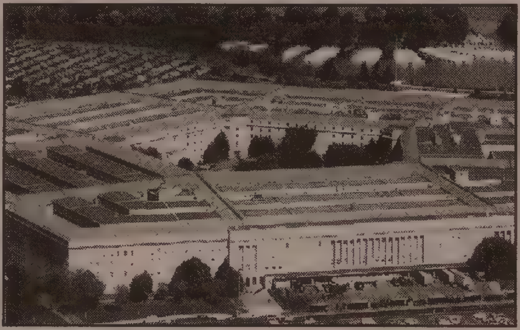
"Dave!"

"Yeah."

"You will never believe this. I got a job working at the Pentagon!"

"Really?"

"Yeah. I'm going to be working as an assistant for the Department of Defense. I just found out today. They are going to be doing a background check on me this week. I gave them your number as one of the people that I know personally so if you get any phone calls from the CIA don't get stressed out."



"I can't believe this. It is like you are James Bond, except an American of course. Your parents are going to be so proud of you! Holy crap, dude, this is awesome!"

We talked some more and I realized that my best friend was really happy and that made me feel really happy. He was so excited about working for the Pentagon and rightfully so. John and I are big fans of anything that is related to James Bond or movies like "The Rock". I found out from John that he has to get up at four in the morning so he can make it to work on time. Not an easy task for guys like us. The last time I was up at four in the morning was when I was on the crew team at Northeastern. Even then, I wasn't really "awake," I was more in this four-in-the-morning daze. Four in the morning to get to work is nuts in my head. But hey, if I got a job at the Pentagon, I would probably put up with it.

I felt so honored at the fact that John put me down as one of the people that he knows. I don't really know why I felt so good about this but I did. I guess it means that he thinks I'm cool enough to let the people at the Pentagon know that I'm a friend of his.

I had a corporate finance exam three days ago that I had not studied for until the night before. My mind was basically blank when it came to corporate finance up until the point I started studying. I hadn't learned a thing from the lectures, so I did what any college kid would do, I pulled an all nighter.

Last Thursday, was the first time in my college career that I pulled a real true all nighter. I started studying at nine in the evening on Thursday and did not go to sleep until noon the next day. I was studying in the library, my eyes were weak, my head was spinning, it was four in the morning and I was thinking about calling it quits when I remembered that John was getting up to go to work. I got on my cell phone and called him.

"Hello?"

"Hey John, it's Dave."

"I know who it is, you idiot, I have caller ID."

"I'm pulling an all-nighter, man, this is awful. Are you excited to go to work?"

"Today is the first day of the rest of my life my friend. I get my security clearance badge today. It says Department of Defense on it and has my picture. I made a mean face."

"Cool, email it to me."

"I can't."

"Why not?"

"It's classified."

When In Manhattan... BY OLIVER PETERSON

Hip Hop Hurray

Rap and Hip Hop have been associated with many things over the years. Early on, the music exploded as a new form of street poetry coupled with outrageous fashion and dance moves. I remember the days when breakdancers seemed to inhabit every street corner with their cardboard mats and massive boom boxes. Back then, they wore tight clothes and punk rock jewelry like bondage belts and studs. White, Upper East Side kids like me were putting on pathetic displays of the worm and single rotation backspins for our parents to the sounds of Grand Master Flash and the Sugar Hill Gang. But in other parts of the city, serious Hip Hop was quietly developing into the cultural juggernaut it is today.

When Gangster Rap hit in the '90s, it was all about violence in the eyes of the conservative world. For a good example of the extremes of '90s Gangster Rap stereotypes, just check out the biggest video game to hit stores this year – the ultra-brutal and very adult Grand Theft Auto, San Andreas. Defenders of the genre have argued that the aggressive lyrical style was, and still is, documentation of urban struggle and the harsh realities of being young and black in America. There are still controversial elements of violence and sex, but with each passing year, legitimacy and power are added to the movement. Hip Hop moguls are some of the most successful businesspeople in entertainment and the fashion, language, and music has spread from the cities to suburbia and rural America, and on and on internationally. How the youth in Tokyo or the mountains of Montana, for that matter, relate, is a mystery, but the music is really the first completely new and non-derivative form in years. It's not for everyone, and difficult for the older generations to understand, but it is a driving force in American society and youth culture that cannot be ignored.

While Gangster Rap is associated more with South Central Los Angeles, the birthplace of Hip Hop is widely accepted to be New York City. Hush tours, which stands for "Us in Hip Hop," runs a four-hour tour in New York that tells the true story of Hip Hop while visiting important sites and creating the vibe for a "real deal" experience. The tour welcomes all ages and all people who have an interest in exploring the roots of Rap, Graffiti art, DJs, MCs, B-Boys, Street Hoops, and Freestyle. The bus travels through Harlem, major Manhattan, and the Bronx, visiting various landmarks along the way. Celebrity pioneers in the industry star as tour guides. Grand Master Caz of The Cold Crush Brothers, Rahiem from Grand Master Flash and The Furious Five, Kool Herc, The Father Of Hip-Hop, DJ Red Alert, and Power 105 are just some of the celebrities that grace the bus. There are always surprise guests on each tour.

Grand Master Flash

Look forward to historical details from the guys who lived it, along with anecdotes and stories akin to E!'s True Hollywood Story. Stops include the Graffiti Wall of Fame and an all-you-can-eat soul food lunch that comes complimentary with your ticket. The rest of the tour happens on the bus. Don't worry, it's a good entertaining ride. Guests are welcome to try out their battling skills or rapping chops with an onboard karaoke freestyle session, answer Hip Hop trivia, and listen to the tales of earlier days when the world wasn't sure this "Rap thing" was more than a passing fad. There's a live dance demonstration and a relaxed atmosphere to socialize with the celebrity guests. Hip Hop hot spots are identified and discussed throughout the drive.

Hush Tours has done Reward and Recognition trips for grade school students and their parents, and custom tours for local youth organizations and international visitors. They cite Japan, Germany, and Canada as being the highest in attendance. Parents, don't be scared. Once again, I've offered you a fantastic bonding experience for you and your child. Sure, they'll be embarrassed by you, but this tour will give them more education of where their music comes from, how it wasn't always violent and that it's not what Hip Hop is about. You, on the other hand, will get a chance to understand what the fascination is, while learning something yourself. Maybe on the ride home you'll be singing "Rapper's Delight" together or competing to see who has the best rhymes – my bet's on the kid.

Hush Tours departs on Saturdays at 11 a.m. from 292 Fifth Avenue, between 30th and 31st Streets in Manhattan. Tickets are $75 for adults and $50 for students and children. Call (212) 714-3527 for info and reservations. Each guest receives a free gift.

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

This weekend was a busy one. Friends came in from Scottsdale, Arizona for a visit and I gave them the usual grand tour of the East End. Their favorite journey? Shopping! I wonder why? The stores were packed with holiday shoppers getting an early start checking off their shopping lists. Let's do some shopping!

Waterstone, Inc. Southampton

At the Long Wharf in Sag Harbor at Around Again there is a "Pre-renovation" sale on 20th century furniture, art, lighting and accessories. This fun shop is filled to the rafters with great old merchandise from the 1940s to the present. Stop in and browse here; you will truly enjoy.

Rose Jewelers on Main Street in Southampton is featuring the Victorinox Swiss Army Watch just in time for the holiday shopping. What a great gift for that special guy in your life, whatever age he may be.

At Waterstone, Inc. at 76 Mariner Drive in Southampton, Manuel is making room for an exciting new inventory for the holidays and the New Year. There is an "End of Season" sale with 30% to 50% off glazed ceramic terracotta, black zinc, limestone and wood planters from around the world. The store has one of the largest selections and styles, and their focus is selling to designers and contractors, and of course, homeowners are welcomed. Picture your holiday tree sitting in a beautiful planter. Then, plant it in the spring. No need to put that beautiful Christmas tree on the side of the road after the holidays…Call them at 631-283-5747.

Dress up your home for the holidays with Hunter Douglas window fashions at Windows & Walls Unlimited on County Road 39 in Southampton. Free consultations are available, as well as the "Special Holiday Savings" sale.

Right next door at Casual Home you can save an additional 10% to 40% off their already low prices on all floor models and in-stock merchandise, which can be delivered immediately.

Patio.com, located at One Montauk Highway in Southampton, is gearing up for the holidays with their "Factory Authorized Clearance" sale on their Brunswick pool table packages. Look for great new items in-stock for holiday entertaining such as ping-pong, air hockey, pinball and arcade games, foosball, poker and so much more.

The Milk Pail on Montauk Highway (between Water Mill and Bridgehampton) is open for the holidays and is featuring fresh apples, apple pies, peach pies and apple cider for your holiday table. I have just ordered my pies for Thanksgiving Day dinner. Everyone loves this delicious dessert…

On Snake Hollow Road in Bridgehampton, at Marders garden shop, you can get your garden growing with their fall bulb collection with the most unusual bulbs for forcing. Check out the terrific topiaries for the upcoming holiday decorations. Don't pass up the fall plant sale on the entire inventory of trees and shrubs at 40% to 60% off. I wait for this sale every year, no kidding!

Verizon Wireless, located in the Bridgehampton Commons, is having their "Super Sale" with buy one, get one free wireless phones and service. The prices start at $29.99 to $79.99. Affordable indeed!

At Christian Andrews at 7 Tradesman Path off Butter Lane in Bridgehampton, look for their famous "End of Season" sale on their entire inventory of beautifully functional furniture. Get going; the merchandise is already flying out the door…

Starfish in the Amagansett Square in Amagansett is offering discounted pottery and discontinued gentle seconds at below wholesale prices by Bulgar USA. Last month over forty pieces were sold in no time at all; Bulgar has restocked the shop for the holidays. They will be spotlighted on QVC for 2005, with the new addition of Stickley Furniture, which is featured now in their twelve nationwide stores. Bulgar still offers their open door police at the warehouse from Monday to Friday. East Hampton's famous The Down Factory Store At The Elegant John is fully stocked with guaranteed lowest prices on goose down comforters, pillows and featherbeds for some dreamy shopping. Holiday Shopping Extravaganza At The Parrish Art Museum

With the holidays right around the corner, one of my favorite events of this season is the popular "Thanksgiving Weekend Shopping Extravaganza" at the Parrish Art Museum, located at 26 Jobs Lane in Southampton. Back again this year, "Holiday Shopping" is bigger and better than ever and it takes place on Thanksgiving weekend, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, November 26, 27 and 28. The fundraiser, which supports the museum's ongoing educational programs, features a legendary gift bazaar, boasting a fabulous flea market and a deluxe silent auction of luxury items.

Last year, I was able to get a good start on my holiday shopping, checking off items on my gift list and enjoying the weekend of fun and shopping, practically in my backyard. Let's face it; no one likes to wait on long lines in the stores when there is so much to do in preparation for holiday guests and dinners. Everything you need is under one big roof at this holiday shopping extravaganza.

The Parrish Art Museum

The event, co-chaired by Lyn Hamer and Leslie Horn, kicks off with a preview cocktail party for benefactors, patrons, sponsors and friends on Friday evening, November 26 from 5 to 8 p.m. This special evening will feature drinks and hors d'oeuvres, providing the earliest opportunity for bargain-hungry shoppers to purchase one-of-a-kind treasures in the flea market such as jewelry, antiques, vintage designer items, clothing, art, books, home furnishings, and other rare items at tag sale prices. In the silent auction, the luxury goods and bazaar showcases retailers from the East End and New York City. Attendees can make the first bids on designer handbags, estate jewels, vacation packages and much more.

There will also be specialty vendors on hand in the gift bazaar, offering a full range of fine merchandise for everyone to enjoy.

On the evening of the cocktail party, The Museum Shop will host a variety of celebrated authors including Tom Wolfe who will sign his new novel I Am Charlotte Simmons. Jamee Gregory will be signing New York Apartments. Pamela and Leslie Banker will be signing copies of The Pocket Decorator: An Illustrated A to Z Handbook to the Essential Language of Interior Design and author Thomas Padon and artist Linda Hackett will both be signing copies of Contemporary Photography and the Garden: Deceits and Fantasies.

The flea market is filled with antiques, home furnishings and other specialty items at tag sale prices. Some of the vendors that will be at the Parrish Shopping Extravaganza with their merchandise are: Antique Rug Galleria (Southampton), Casa Casa, Chez Touché, George Dean Callas, Cozy Friendz, de la Barre Jewelry, The Elegant Setting-Artfully Eclectic (Southampton), Susan Gubelman (Newport and Palm Beach), Kalif Kreations, Kep Designs, Kim & Me (Southampton), Lynch's Garden Center (Southampton), MJK Knits, Maitai LLC, Nice Imports, SOLAR, Splash of Pink, Stevenson's Toys & Games (Southampton), Sylvester & Co. (Sag Harbor) and Walker Antiques.

This is a favorite shopping event for those who like to jump-start their holiday gift buying, and get their homes ready for holiday entertaining. So mark your calendar for the "Parrish Presents Continues" on Saturday, November 27 from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Sunday, November 28 from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. The event is open to the general public for a five-dollar admission fee. Children aged 18 and under are admitted at no charge.

For additional information, or to purchase tickets for the preview cocktail party, call 631-283-2118, extension 33.

Attention Domestic Partners

The good news is: New York has passed a law which allows you to visit your partner when he or she is hospitalized.

The bad news is: You may be called upon to "prove" you are the domestic partner by evidence such as a formal partnership agreement, domestic partnership registration or coverage under your partner's employment or insurance plans. Do you have such proof, and will you remember to bring it to the emergency room when you have received a call that your partner has been injured or taken ill?

You can, through a series of legal documents, ensure that in this and many other legal situations your wishes are known and complied with.

If you wish to speak to an attorney about the legal issues which affect your domestic partnership, contact:

JUST FOR KIDS

AN EAST END KID:
LIGHT UP A LIFE

By Emily Hart Post with some help from Katlean de Monchy and David Post

A few Saturdays ago, other kids and I shared a fantasy – to spend a couple of hours in the Toys R Us Mega Store on Times Square before it was open to everyone. The party, called Light Up A Life, was to benefit the New York Presbyterian Hospital's Weill Cornell Pediatric (I needed help with that name) and their Support Committee chooses programs to get the funds from the benefit – that means it's to help sick kids. It was a costume party and, since I have not gotten over the witches from last Halloween, I did not wear a costume and I stayed clear of big people wearing scary costumes. Aside from that, the morning was great. There was food, singing and dancing and my favorite performer, Magic Al, who always makes me laugh. The store has so many toys and things to try, like a train set and video games, and you can get close to the big ferocious dinosaur – which doesn't scare me the way witches do. There was a big Ferris Wheel to try and storybook characters all around the store. And the most fun part was that I got my dad to buy me some of the toys I played with.

HEALTH, BEAUTY & FITNESS

Pilates Reformation

I walked into the futuristic fitness center, high ceilings looming over the Health Bar, where ultra-vitamin-packed smoothies were being whipped up by slender ladies. I timidly approached the woman behind the front desk.

"Hi… What is Pie - lates?" I asked. She smiled. "Pilates (Puh-la-teez) is a method of exercise used to stretch, strengthen, and balance the body," she said. I could not believe how atrociously I had pronounced the word. Now, two years later, that futuristic fitness center in New Jersey is not so futuristic-looking anymore, and the word Pilates has incorporated itself into mainstream vocabulary because of the exercise's immense popularity throughout the United States, Europe, and Asia.

Pilates is named after its founder, Joseph Pilates, who was an English performer and boxer around 1914. When World War I broke out, Mr. Pilates was placed under forced internment in a camp. During his time there, he taught fellow residents of the camp practices he had learned during twenty years of self-study of yoga, Zen, and Greek regimens. When he was transferred to another camp, he was placed in charge of injured detainees, and he utilized the practices that he had modified to heal through intense stretching and physical exertion. Mr. Pilates created his own equipment out of bedsprings to establish resistance during the stretches, and also to aid in movement for the bedridden. Spring resistance is still an integral part of Pilates exercises. Pilates exercises can be practiced solely on a mat, but there is a whole realm of Pilates for which equipment, like the Reformer or the Cadillac, is necessary. The Reformer is very similar to the original device Mr. Pilates constructed out of hospital beds and springs, and it still utilizes the force and resistance to help tone and recuperate bodies.

Pilates is intensely beneficial to both the mind and body. Some of the great rewards of a consistent Pilates practice include increased lung capacity and circulation, due to the focus on deep, lateral breathing. This signifies filling the lungs entirely by expanding the ribs, and then exhaling to empty the lungs to the very bottom. This purifies the body from toxins. Strength and flexibility are also vastly improved, particularly in the back muscles and the abdomen. Posture, balance, and core strength are also focal points of the practice. Bone density and joint health are also increased.

I took part in a private Pilates mat session this morning. For those of you who are familiar with yoga, there are some similarities. However, you spend the majority of a mat Pilates workout on your back, with your head and neck elevated off the floor. This offers an extensive workout for your abdominals. Joseph Pilates once said that, "In ten sessions you will feel the difference, in twenty you will see the difference, in thirty you will have a whole new body."

The key to proper alignment in a Pilates workout lies in the "Pilates Box," which is the span of your body from shoulder to shoulder and hip to hip. To avoid contorting your body into positions that will compromise your alignment, you should always keep this "box" in mind, asking yourself "Am I square?"

My sister-in-law, Shasta, is currently training to become a Pilates instructor. She practices for several hours every day, and she trains on weekends in New York City for about 6 hours per day. It's been only a few weeks, and her body is transformed. When I asked her why Pilates has become her exercise of choice, she said, "For me, it's better than a massage, because I don't walk out feeling limp and sleepy, but energized. Suddenly, I feel aware of everything in my body."

You don't have to dive headfirst into Pilates routines, though. Most people benefit from slowly incorporating exercise into their daily lives, and Pilates is no different. Mr. Pilates recommended in his first book, "Return to Life Through Contrology," that you begin by practicing Pilates for just 10 minutes every day. This is a good way to ease yourself into a routine. Eventually, your flexibility and endurance will crave a longer practice. Just listen to your body!

–Emily J Weitz

Shopping Your Own Closet

Ever open your closet (you know, the one that's bursting at the seams) and still find yourself at a loss for what to wear? Do the words, "I've just got nothing to wear," resonate? Especially when you're planning for a night out – nothing fits, you can't see the wood for the trees, it's all out of style, your clothes are just not the image you want to portray – they're old, boring….you're over every item you have and so you end up looking and feeling less than the person you want to be.

Personally, I have over 50 pairs of shoes, scores of pants, skirts, sweaters and shirts, accessories and bags galore and yet, I still find myself groaning that I've got nothing to wear. Hence, I turn to the same old familiar standbys. Sound familiar? Well, it doesn't have to be. Your closet can be a place of pleasure, rather than pain.

All you need to do is purge! Learn to shop your own closet and what's more, when you do, you could be opening the wardrobe doors to a goldmine. There are hidden treasures in your closet and I've wrestled a pirate and have the map to find them.

It all begins with a closet makeover. For some strange and unknown reason, most people have a hard time throwing clothes away, purging their closets. But it's so worth it. Once you un-clutter you closet, it has an effect on your whole life, your whole being.

First, go through every item in your closet and ask yourself.

1) Do I love it? Really love it…

2) Is it flattering? Be honest and maybe get a second opinion from a friend you trust…

3) Is this the image I want to project? Does it speak to you…

4) Does it fit? Is it too big, too small, uncomfortable…

5) Is it in fashion, or should it be in a museum? Old and raggedy, or will never come back into style, no matter how much you wish it would.

Once you've sorted through your treasures, put aside the clothes you're determined to keep. But what to do with the cast-offs? You can actually make money from the clothes you're going to discard, or put some zest back into your wardrobe by reviving oldies but goodies.

Here's how:

1) With the clothes you flat-out don't love, make money by selling them. Do this on e-Bay, or at a tag sale, or bring them to consignment stores. You can see some cash for your stash if you donate them to the Salvation Army or thrift store, too, and then claim it on your taxes.

2) Same goes for items that just don't make you look like a million dollars. Getting dressed every day should be a pleasure. It should make you feel special. Once you begin to do this, your outside will beautify your inside.

3) If clothes don't fit, there are two ways to go. Either find a great tailor and have them altered, or revert to suggestions 1&2. Just don't leave them cluttering up your closet and your life.

4) If something's not in fashion anymore, or you like an item but it's not quite you, you may also be able to revamp it. Have a tailor shorten a skirt, tighten a flare, or trim a collar. Doing this will give you a brand new piece, just for the price of the alterations.

Once you've purged, it's time to organize. This makes it easier to shop your closet, and what could be more fun than shopping at home? Better organization helps you to see outfits in new and exciting ways and makes it easier to navigate your closet.

1) Hang items in sections: trousers, jackets, skirts, etc.

2) Color code items – put darks and lights together

3) Categorize sections a)by lifestyle, b)casual, c)cocktail/evening

4) Split suits, so instead of seeing them as one item, you'll see them as separate pieces allowing you to be more versatile with them. Try a suit jacket with a pair of leather pants, for example.

Other organizations tips:

1) Hang clothes on matching hangers so that your eye sees everything at one level. This also makes more room in the closet

2) Put shoes on racks, or better still, try clear shoeboxes that allow you to see shoes but keeps them dust free.

If, however, this all seems daunting, or too much like hard work, you can always call in the experts. Get someone else to edit your closet for you. You can go the more expensive route with a company like Visual Therapy, http://www.visual-therapy.com/index.html. Or call Pamela Bouchard, Personal Style Consultant, for an appointment, (212.439.8040). She'll come and do all the work for you. Pamela's prices start at $250.

The Garden At Rock Cottage

by Lance Brilliantine

Bromeliads

Bromeliads are beautiful and easy to cultivate. They have been hybridized extensively, and the resulting blooms, colors, and textures offer great variety. Even though they are easy to cultivate, they have not caught on among gardening enthusiasts because they are perceived as exotic and out of reach. Nothing could be further from the truth!

The best known bromeliad, of course, is the pineapple. All bromeliads are part of a plant family known as Bromeliaceae. The family contains over 2,500 species in about 56 genera. The wide range of plants in this family show great variety. For example, Spanish moss is a member of this family. Other members resemble aloe plants or yuccas.

Bromeliads were first recorded when Columbus introduced the pineapple to Spain on the return from his second voyage to the New World in 1493. So great was its popularity that within 50 years the pineapple was cultivated as far east as India and throughout Europe. It has only been in the last hundred years that bromeliads have become widely available as ornamental plants.

In their native habitats (unique to the Americas), the plants grow from sea level to elevations of up to 14,000 feet. They can be found in rain forests and deserts, and naturally occur as far north as the Virginia coast. Some bromeliads are "air plants" while others are terrestrial. Most are epiphytic and derive their nutrients from the water and debris they collect in their cup-shaped leaves. There are even reports that some bromeliads are carnivorous and digest insects that drown in the water of the plant's leafy cup.

Because the plants reproduce asexually (they send out offshoots or "pups"), they are easy to propagate. As a result, they are readily available from mail order houses. Plant blooms can be pink, red, yellow, orange, or a combination thereof. Most of the blooms are bright and striking. The blooms last as long as three or four months.

Bromeliads are suitable for both indoor and greenhouse culture, and are successful outdoors when temperatures stay above freezing. (At Rock Cottage we maintain about two dozen bromeliads that are interspersed in the garden each spring. The plants are stored during winter in the greenhouse and returned to the garden each spring.)

There are two main classifications of bromeliad. The terrestrial species grow in soil and survive well when potted in very well draining potting mediums, where the roots can dry out. The terrestrial species like bright light or sun. Other terrestrial species grow successfully on cliffs where their roots penetrate cracks and fissures for moisture and organic nutrients. The epiphytic species (air plants) use other plants for support – usually trees, shrubs, and cacti. The epiphytes can also be seen growing on telephone poles in tropical areas, and do well attached to pieces of wood or cork, or dangling from wires placed in areas that receive frequent water. They like dappled sun and warmer temperatures.

All bromeliads have a spiral arrangement of leaves that form a rosette. This causes the plant to grow in a flattened configuration with its leaves lined up to create a water storage area. Bromeliads rely less heavily on their roots for nourishment and more often rely on the water and debris collected in the rosette. The plants also share another common characteristic, which is the tiny scales that form on their leaves (called trichomes). These scales serve as an efficient absorption system for water, and may also help protect the plant in very dry or sunny conditions. The scales may form patterns and bandings on the leaves, which add to the plant's beauty. In some instances, the scales may appear hair-like and have a silvery color.

With few exceptions, the flower stalk appears from the center of the rosette. The stalk can be either long or short – with the flowers held either far away or close to the rosette. Flowers may be single or the plant may develop many offshoots from the flower stalk that produces multiple blooms.

Most bromeliads flower only once. The plant then vegetatively produces new plantlets that feed off the host until they are large enough to set roots of their own. While the host plant may survive a generation or two, it eventually dies off. One plant will produce multiple offspring – so there is never a dearth of blooms available.

We believe bromeliads are one of the overlooked plants that need to be considered a part of every gardener's collection!

Real Estates

by Diane Strecker

Amagansett North is the new hot spot on the East End where "the market is more ferocious than ever," says Stewart Epstein of Devlin McNiff Real Estate in East Hampton. Many of the landmark estates in this area have sold this past season at record prices. "There's really no downside to buying real estate right now," says Mr. Epstein, "where the rental potential is always a cushion".

The beloved Gardiner's Island, just off Amagansett on Gardiner's Bay, has sparked much interest in the area with the passing of Robert David Lion Gardinèr, leaving the fate of the Island to his niece Alexandra Creel Goelet, whose husband is a known developer. What happens to the island is anyone's guess. However, many speculate that development of the island may be inevitable and, as a result, surrounding mainland properties will gain value and prestige to an area where prices are already driving upward. This area is filled with horse farms, woodlands and some of the best bay beaches in the Hamptons. The area has an extremely rural feel and is true "country." The further in you drive, the further removed you become from the present day. There is wildlife, walking and bike trails and you will not encounter a busy main street for miles. The general store and community house appear to be the hub of activity in this tiny hamlet. Artists such as Jackson Pollack inhabited the area over the years, finding peace, tranquility, privacy and excellent light. The sun sets in a way here like it does no where else on the two forks, particularly this time of year, when streaming color pours through the many salt marshes and ponds. It is similar to living in a private club. "No wonder the price of admission is getting higher," says Mr. Epstein.

A book called "Amagansett," by London screenwriter Mark Mills, was recently released as well, to cause even more of a buzz around the otherwise quiet community. The book recounts the area and its inhabitants, from fishermen to socialites, back in the late 1940s. When we hear the name Amagansett, we usually think ocean; think again. Many are heading north of the highway of late, to find their dream home.

Waterfront on Gardiner's Bay, a beach cottage is currently for sale for $3,750,000. It has a private beach and views of both Montauk and Gardiner's Island. The renovated two-story 2900 sq ft home sits on nearly an acre. It has 3 bedrooms, 3 baths, established plantings and a vegetable garden. CLEAN UP AFTER YOURSELF

Dear Dan,

It's 5 p.m. Saturday, October 24. There are nine shopping carts full of garbage in the "Riverboat" parking lot plus garbage lying on the ground. It is unsightly and an embarrassment to the town.

The guys' pushing the garbage carts around the lot are visible every day yet code enforcement people never notice them.

Another and bigger problem is a very large tree on the "Tirecraft" property that is dead, rotted and leaning toward my property. Its circumference is 9 feet, 11 inches at a point about four feet above the ground.

Any storm, hurricane or nor'easter could blow down this tree onto my property causing tens of thousands of dollars worth of damage. Perhaps the town should cut the tree down.

One more problem is the swamp behind "Tirecraft". I cleaned it myself and the whole area by the banks of the beautiful Peconic River in June. Now it is a disgusting mess again. Loiterers use the area for a bathroom and garbage dump for personal stuff. Again, they are visible but nobody does anything about them.

I know this area is on the outskirts of Southampton Town, but why should it be treated differently than Hampton Bays or Southampton?

Dear Dan,

To paraphrase Ernest L. Thayer's poem about an underdog team…almost making it:

Oh, somewhere in this favored land the sun is shining bright.

The band is playing somewhere, and somewhere hearts are light.

And, somewhere men are laughing, and little children shout.

But there is no joy in the USA-

Old Glory has just struck out.

PEACE FOR SALE

Dear Dan,

I heard that Villa Maria was recently sold. It is a beautiful property. Who bought it?

Thanks.

HAIL TO THE CHIEF

Dear Dan,

Big Celebration of the re-election of OUR President Bush yet the front-page issue displayed nothing.

Americans prosper and enjoy OUR country, yet are so unpatriotic. Yes, I voted for OUR PRESIDENT, but I would have supported Sen. Kerry if he won. Bias journalism is unprofessional and separates OUR Country.

My support for Kerry was before the election. Now we all have to get behind our President. – DR

HOWDY PARDNER

Dear Dan,

I am from Big Spring, Texas (forty miles from Midland). I read your article about our part of the world, very funny. I would like a copy of this paper; (believe it or not i can pay for it). The issue I refer to was dated, 10/29/04 or was it 10/20/04. I would like to share your view with my community and with Midland community.

Yes our area is slow paced, but that is why we live here, we could have the hustle and bustle, but what a life. Even though you commented on ole pick em ups and men in cowboy hats, we are not the hicks you make us out to be. Had to laugh though cuz you brought up the horses and ranches lackin' here…this is known as oil territory, not meant for extravagant horse ranches, those are elsewhere in Texas. We even have New Yorkers that have moved here to get outa your crazy life style, up yonder. (Figured you'd like better if I had a hick dialect). Anyways if will answer me on my e-mail addy, I can give you my address so you can send a copy of that particular issue of your paper. I was surprised, being such a place, as yours (Hampton's) does not supply an archive on the web. Even us local yokels have archives for the paper on our web sites.

Thanks pardner.

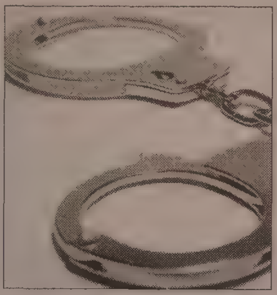
Police Blotter



Freaky! It appears a man who has been peering into the windows of John Marshall Elementary School on Gingerbread Lane in East Hampton, and who then tried to enter the school, was warned he would be arrested for trespassing if he attempted to do it again.

* * *

All Manner of Slather. An anonymous person, who found a case containing oils and creams on the corner of Gould Street and Newtown Lane, turned it in to police headquarters.

* * *

Knuckle Knife?* Now That's A First… Everyone has heard of a "knuckle sandwich." But apparently there is a new (well, to me) knuckle-apparatus to be wary of. According to East Hampton Town Police reports, a "knuckle knife," along with Vicodin tablets, a small quantity of cocaine, several bags of marijuana, packaging materials and scales were found in a house on Stephen Hands Path. Detective Sergeant Chris Anderson of the East Hampton Town Police told reporters that the department had received numerous complaints that people, including teenagers, were "hanging out" at the house and purchasing drugs. Armed with a search warrant, authorities raided this alleged den-of-iniquity, recovered the aforementioned drugs and related paraphernalia and arrested four individuals. Three men were residents of the home, while the fourth lived on Cokeview (oops, I meant) Oakview Highway in East Hampton. All were held on various charges.

* * *

The Case of the Purloined Plasma. A television worth $9,000 disappeared from a Miankoma Lane home in Amagansett. It appears someone jimmied open a window and snared the 52-inch set.

Brent's General Store Parking Lot Doubles Nicely As Free-For-All Boxing Ring. A Massapequa man was allegedly socked in the face by a Hampton Bays man as he was leaving the Amagansett market, which is located on Montauk Highway. Once the first blow connected, the two started beating each other up in the parking lot. The brother of the Hampton Bays man joined in the fray followed by a friend of the Massapequa native. East Hampton Police reports indicate store employees and patrons separated the quartet until authorities arrived. The man who landed the first punch was released on a $150 appearance ticket later the same day.

Caught In The Act. Two teens, who spied a wallet in a car parked in the Schenck lot in East Hampton, were nabbed in the act of thievery by the owner. Apparently, the youths entered the vehicle and as they looked through the wallet, the car's owner caught them. Police were summoned and les enfants terribles were arrested.

* * *

Louise Point House Cased. Apparently, expensive television sets are a hot commodity. Two high-end Sony TVs, worth about $5,000 together, were taken from a Springs home along with a $1,400 Sony DVD player. All signs point to the burglar entering the home through locked sliding glass doors at the rear of the house.

* * *

Intergalactic Rip-Off? Well, Almost. An Internet advertisement for a Grand Cherokee, owned by an East Hamptonite, caught the eye of an alleged car dealer. The two men agreed on a price of $14,590 for the Jeep. The dealer sent a certified bank check in the amount of $23,100, explaining he had gotten the check prior to having to leave the country. He asked that the difference be refunded to him. The check, however, did not clear and the car owner reported his dealings to authorities, saying he believed the note was counterfeit.

Maltese-Yorkie Missing in Montauk. After returning to their home on South Essex Street in Montauk after dinner, a couple discovered their pooch Roxie had disappeared. They also found a sliding glass door unlocked, but reported nothing other than the dog missing.
